EARL BATHURST.

My Lord,
IF I were not fully apprized of Your Lordhip's contempt for that fervile and adulatory ftyle, in which patrons of eminent rank are too frequently addreffed, yet my own habits and fentiments would fufficiently fecure You from the uneafinefs, which panegyrick moft fenfibly gives to thofe who moft highly deferve it ; nor fhould I indeed have been ambitious of obtaining any protection for the following work, which muft fucceed or fail by its own worth or demerit, and cannot be fupported by the fplendour of a name, if the obligations, which Your Lordfhip has conferred on me, were not of fuch a kind, as to call aloud for the moft open and the warmeft acknowledgement.

On fuch an occafion, it might perhaps be pardonable to deviate a little from my former principles, and to delineate Your Lordfhip's character in juft, yet glowing, colours; efpecially as my own certain and perfonal knowledge of it has given me the power of drawing it to the life ; and, if one of two groundlefs imputations muft neceffarily be incurred, I fhould prefer the fufpicion of being a flatterer to the charge of being ungrateful; but I muft not forget that it is Yourfelf, whom I am addreffing, and I could not write to You with pleafure what I knew You would read with pain.

I check myfelf, therefore, my Lord, with reluctance, and abftain from thofe topicks, to which the overflowing of my zeal would naturally impel me ; but I cannot let flip this opportunity of informing the publick, who have hitherto indulgently approved and encouraged my labours, that, although I have received many fignal marks of friendfhip from a number of illuftrious perfons, to whofe favours I can never proportion my thanks, yet Your Lordfhip has been my greateft, my only, Benefactor; that, without any folicitation, or even requeft on my part, You gave me a fubftantial and permanent token of regard, which You rendered ftill more valuable by Your obliging manner of giving it, and which has been literally the fole fruit that I have gathered from an inceffant courfe of very painful toil; that Your kind intentions extended to a larger field ; and that You had even determined to reward me in a manner the moft agreeable both to my inclinations and to the nature of my ftudies, if an event, which, as it procured an acceffion to Your happinefs, could not but conduce to mine, had not prevented the full effects of Your kindnefs.

It might here become me to fupprefs, what I cannot however perfuade myfelf to conceal, that Your Lordfhip was pleafed to affign the moft flattering reafons for Your intention, and to declare that You defired my promotion both for my own fake, and for that of the publick; the firft of which motives 1 afcribe to Your candour and the goodnefs of Your heart; the fecond, which I am wholly unconfcious of deferving, I can impute only to'Your fingular benignity and indulgence.

As a benefit intended is the fame in my opinion with a benefit conferred, my obligation to Your Lordfhip is perfectly equal ; and this fentiment, I entreat You to believe, no change of fituation can alter, no length of time can obliterate. I had a friend, my Lord, who knew my gratitude for the former inftance of Your kindnefs ; and He indeed was entitled to fome fhare of it, as it was He , who procured me the honour of being known to Your Lordfhip: with Your late favours, unhappily for me, and un-happily for all who were connected with him, he did not live to be acquainted.

Your Lordfhip perceives that I fpeak of Sir JAMES PORTER; whom You alfo called your friend, and by whom You were moft truly efteemed and refpected. He was a man, whofe focial virtues were fo tranfcendent, that his life was fpent in perpetual exertions of them, and not a day of it elapfed without fome intention fincerely expreffed, or fome act zealoufly performed, for the pleafure or advantage of another; nor were his talents inferiour to his benevolence ; for, during his embaffy at CONSTANTINOPLE, where he gained a perfect acquaintance with the manners of the extraordinary people among whom he refided, his addrefs and activity were io properly exerted, that the interefts of our mercantile body were never better fecured, nor the honour of our nation better fupported. Of ufeful, as well as ornamental, knowledge, both in literature and fcience, he had confiderably a greater portion than is ufually poffeffed by men of the world; and, while he was effectually ferving his country as a minifter, he juftly acquired the reputation of a fcholar. One part of his character was no lefs amiable than uncommon: fo totally free was he from envy, the vice of little fouls, that he was always eager to encourage the appearance of literary merit, wherever it could be found ; and, if any perfon had cultivated a particular branch of learning more affiduounly than himfelf, he took a real pleafure in receiving information, and, what was ftill more rare at his age, in renouncing ancient prejudices, and retracting opinions which he allowed to have been precipitately formed.

But it is needlefs to expatiate on his excellent qualities, which were known to Your Lordfhip, as well as to many of Your common friends; and I need only add, that his well fpent life would have been completely happy, if it had lafted until he had feen You retire with dignity from the high office which You fo long filled with honour, and had been witnefs of the fplendid tranquillity which you now enjoy.

The nature and fcope of the following work, which I had before imparted to Him, I took the liberty of explaining alfo to Your Lordfhip; and, if the execution of it were conformable to the defign, I might flatter myfelf, that it would obtain your approbation: it has antiquity at leaft to recommend it ; and, whatever opinion Your Lordfhip may juftly entertain concerning the general utility of minute philological refearches, yet You will be convinced, that ancient literature, properly directed, may be applied to aany ufeful purpofes beyond thofe intended at the fchool or the college.

Among other things, You will remark with fatisfaction, that, how much foever the old ftates of Greece might have furpaffed us in the productions of art and genius, yet the adminiftration of juftice, on which our common fecurity depends, now flows in a purer ftream at Weftminfter, than formerly at ATHENS; for the Archon fat in a tribunal, where every cafe was generally decided by a kind of political law, to which no precedents were applied, and from which no rules were deduced; whereas Your Lordfhip prefided in a court where the great boundaries of property are not only diftinct and vifible, but irrevocably fixed, where nothing is vague or precarious, nothing left to difcretionary interpretation, but where Your predeceffors wifely eftablifhed, and Your Lordfhip nobly maintained, a beautiful fyftem of liberal jurifprudence, which, while it fecures many important rights of our countrymen, contributes to the glory of our country itfelf by attracting the admiration of all mankind.

The laws of ENGLAND are the proper ftudy of Englifhmen; but they always fhine with greater luftre, when they are compared with thofe of other nations; and, as Your Noble Father conftantly admired the eloquence of Demofthenes, fo I am perfuaded that Your Lordfhip will not be difpleafed with the fpeeches of an orator, whom Demofthenes himfelf both admired and imitated : if I fhould not be deceived in this expectation, I fhall gain a fufficient reward for my trouble in tranflating him, and fhall feel Your Lordfhip's approbation of my paffed, to be the ftrongeft incentive to future, labours.

> I am, my Lord,

Your Lordfhip's moft obliged and

WILLIAM JONES.

PREFATORY DISCOURSE.

There is no branch of learning, from which a ftudent of the law may receive a more rational pleafure, or which feems more likely to prevent his being difgufted with the dry elements of a very complicated fcience, than the hiftory of the rules and ordinances by which nations, eminent for wifdom and illuftrious in arts, have regulated their civil polity: nor is this the only fruit that he may copect to reap from a general knowledge of foreign laws both ancient and modern; for, whilf he indulges the liberal curiofity of a fcholar in examining the cuftoms and infitutions of men, whofe works have yielded him the higheft delight, and whofe actions have raifed his admiration, he will feel the fatisfaction of a patriot in obferving the preference due in moft inftances to the laws of his own country above thofe of all other ftates; or, if his juft profpects in life give him hopes of becoming a legiflator, he may colleat many ufful hints, for the improvement even of that fabrick which his anceftors have erected with infinite exertions of virtue and genius, but which, like all human fyftems, will ever advance nearer to perfection and ever fall fhort of it. In the courfe of his enquiries he will conftantly obferve a ftriking uniformity among all nations, whatever feas or mountains may feparate them, or how many ages foever may have elapfed between the periods of their exiftence, in thofe great and fundamental principles, which, being clearly deduced from natural reafon, are equally diffufed over all mankind, and are not fubject to alteration by any change of place or time; nor will he fail to remark as friking a diverfity in thofe laws, which, proceeding merely from pofitive inftitution, are confequently as various as the wills and fancies of thofe who enact them: fuch, among a thoufand, are the rules by which the poffeffions of a perfon deceafed, whether folid and permanent, or incorporeal and fluctuating, are tranfmitted to his heirs or fucceffors, and which could never have been fo capricioufly diverfified, if they had been founded on pure reafon, inftead of being left to the difcretion of every fociety, for whofe convenience they are calculated.

Sir MATTHEW HALE, to whofe learning: and diligence the prefent age is no lefs indebted than his contemporaries were to his wifdom and virtue, feems to have approved the ftudy which I recommend; and, in his Hiftory of the Common Law, has given a fummary of the rules which prevailed among the ancient Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans, concerning the hereditary tranfmiffion of property; but, as he profeffed to touch very fhortly on that fubject, and was contented with tranfcribing the verfion of Petit, without having recourfe to the authors by whom the originals are preferved and explained, his account of the Attick laws is remarkably fuperficial and erroneous. He complains, that the text is very obfcure : it is indeed, as he cites it, not only dark, but corrupt; and the fenfe, which he collects from it, is by no means perfpicuous. A defire of removing this obfcurity, and of fupplying a defect, however unimportant, in the work of fo great a man, firft induced me to renew my acquaintance, which had been for many years interrupted, with the Athenian orators, from whofe private fpeeches I had reafon to expect the cleareft light on the fubject of inheritances; and I prefently recollected one of them, whofe remains I had feen when I was a boy, but had been deterred, like many others, from reading them, by the difficulty of the forenfick terms, which occurred in almoft every page.

This was ISEUS, a lawyer of the firft clafs at Athens, and an advocate, as the ancient criticks agree, of a ftrong original genius; but, as his works mult have been dry, if not unintelligible, to the herd of grammarians and philologers, by whom the old monuments of Grecian learning were faved from deftruction, they feem to have been greatly neglected; for, out of at leaft fifty of his genuine fpeeches, which were extant in the ninth century, ten only remain; and thefe, as they all relate to the Athenian laws of hereditary and teftamentary fucceffion, and give abundant fatisfaction upon that head, I here prefent to the ftudent of our Englifh laws in his native language, not doubting but that they will yield him the fame entertainment which they have afforded me: fince, however, he will naturally expect fome account of an author, with whom fo few are acquainted, I will endeavour, before I refume the fubject of the Attick laws, to fatisfy his expectations ; having firft apprized him, that this ancient orator muft be carefully diftinguifhed from another of the fame name, who feems to have flourifhed at Rome in the reign of Trajan or Domitian ; for he is highly extolled in a fet epifle by the younger Pliny, and incidentally by Juvenal, as a wonderfully rapid fpeaker, and a fketch of his life is drawn by Philoftratus, who calls him an Affyrian, and adds, that in his youth he was extremely addicted to the pleafures of love and wine, and was remarked for the foppery of his drefs, but that he afterwards changed his courfe of life, and became, as it were, a new man ; it it is evident, that the declaimer, of whom they fpeak, had nothing in common with my author but the volubility of his language, and his name, which was probably affumed, as that of Ifocrates alfo was taken by one of the later fophifts who wrote the inftructions to Demonicus.

ISÆUS, the mafter of Demofthenes, and the true fountain of that eloquence which afterwards flowed with fo impetuous a fiream, is by fome fuppofed to have been a Chalcidian, and by others, with greatcr appearance of probability, an Athenian: but whatever country may claim the honour of being his birth-place, it is certain that he was educated at Athens, where he became famous as a pleader of caufes after the clofe of the Peloponnefian war. The time of his birth may be nearly afcertained by reafoning from the known or fuppofed dates of his fpeeches; for that on the eftate of Dicæogenes appears to have been delivered in the fourth year of the ninety-feventh Olympiad, or two thoufand one hundred and fixty-fix years ago: now it is very probable that he was then at leaft in his twenty-feventh year ; for it has been remarked, that both Demofthenes and Cicero began to diftinguifh themfelves at that age; and Dionyfius, on a fimilar occafion, fuppofes that Dinarchus muft firft have fpoken in publick at the age of twenty-five or twenty-fix; whence we may fairly conclude, that Ifæus was not born after the ninetieth Olympiad; and we can hardly believe that he was much older, fince he certainly continued to flourifh as an advocate, and compofed the fpeech on the eftate of Hagnias, after the beginning of Philip's reign. If this computation be juft, he could not have been regularly a pupil of Ifocrates, who was born in the firft year of the eighty-fixth Olympiad, but, according to the beft accounts, did not open his fchool till the archonihip of Lyfiftratus, when Ifrus was at leaft in his forty-eighth year, and in the height of his reputation : it is not, indeed, improbable, and no more, perhaps, than this was meaned by Hermippus, that he might occafionally attend the lectures of fo renowned a mafter ; but it is certain, that he took pupils himfelf at that very time; for Demofthenes, who was then but twelve years old, and who foon after deliberated on the choice of an inftructor in the art of feaking, preferred him to Ifocrates, not from any difference in the prices of their inftructions, as it is vulgarly fuppofed, but from a well-grounded opinion, as Plutarch juftly imagines, that the fyle and manner of Ifæus were more forcible, and better adapted to the purpofes of real life, than the fine polifh, elegant turns, and fweet numbers, which Ifocrates taught with fo much refinement. This ardent and nervous diction, which Demofthenes admired, he imitated alfo with fuch fuccefs, that in his feventeenth year he pronounced the fpeeches now extant againft his guardian Aphobus, and not long after delivered the two againft Onetor, which fome of the old criticks fuppofe to have been written, or at leaft corrected, by his mafter: we may trace, indced, the manly features of the inftructor in thofe and feveral other compofitions of the illuftrious pupil, whofe orations on publick affairs, with which Ifæus never interfered, exhibit fo noble a fpecimen of true eloquence, that the palm has been by univerfal confent given to him as the firft orator of Greece; yet his private fpeeches are not fuperior in force or beauty to thofe of his teacher, who would probably have thundered with equal energy in the affembly of Athenian citizens, if his temper and inclination had not induced him to prefer the certain advantages of a very ufeful profeffion to the precarious favours which the giddy populace beftow and refume at their pleafure. This, however, is no more than conjecture ; for even the profound antiquary and excellent critick, DIONYSIUS, who has left us an admirable treatife on the ftyle of Ifxus, profeffes a total ignorance of his life and conduct in civil affairs; but it is obvious, that, if he had taken any part in adminiftration, and harangued the people on important occafions, a man of his great capacity and application muft foon have been diftinguifhed by his contemporaries, and would have been mentioned with applaufe by the hiftorians of his country. My opinion is likewife confirmed by the titles of his genuine fpeeches preferved by Harpocration, Pollux, and Apoftolius, not one of which appears to have been delivered on any national queftion ; and this may be the reafon, why moft of the ancients, who are fo copious in praifing the fmoothnefs of Ifocrates, the graces of Lyfias, the founding periods of $\not \ldots f$ chines, the dignity of Lycurgus, the united force and elegance of Hyperides, fay nothing of Ifæus; for all the others were eminent in publick life, or at leaft compofed orations on fubjects of a publick nature: thus Lyfias added to his other excellent qualities an ardent zeal for liberty, and raifed five hundred men at his own expenfe for the fervice of the ftate, in expelling the thirty tyrants, and reftoring the popular government, which he fupported alfo by his eloquence ; and Ifocrates laboured fuccefsfully to unite the Greeks in a common caufe againt their old enemy the king of Perfia: the political conduct of Æfchines, Lycurgus, Hyperides, is generally known; and, although Dinarchus would not perhaps have attained much celebrity by the ftrength of his own genius, yet he has acquired a rank among the ten orators of Athens by his affiduous imitation of the great man, whom he could not but admire, even when he impeached him: as to Andocides, his offences and misfortunes would have preferved his name, if his harangue on a peace with the Lacedæmonians had been loft; and, if Antipho had left no fpeeches in criminal cafes, yet the place, which Thucydides, who is thought to have been his pupil in rhetorick, has given him in the hiftory of the Peloponnefian war, would have rendered him fufficiently illuftrious; fo that, of all the ten, Ifrus alone appears to have confined his talents to the narrow limits of the bar and the compofition of forenfick arguments; which, however interefting to lawyers, cannot be fuppofed to attract the notice of fcholars in general fo much as the pompous and folemn orations on treaties and embaffies, or the various events of an obftinate war. After all, one cannot help wondering, that although Dionyfius lived in the very age of Cicero, and was copied almoft too clofely by Quintilian, yet the name of Ifæus is not particularly diftinguifhed in the rhetorical pieces of the two Romans: for this omiffion I can no otherwife account than by afcribing it to inadvertence or to accident; and by obferving, that the fame of the Philippicks was fo fplendid, as not only to eclipfe the reputation of a mere advocate, but even to diminifh the attention due to the other productions of Demofthenes himfelf, whofe private fpeeches have been almoft as much neglected as thofe of his mafter.

This is all that I have been able to collect concerning the life of ISÆUS, and I now proceed to difcourfe more at large, but without prolixity, on his profeffional character and the ftyle of his oratory, not meaning to anticipate the judgement of the publick on the following fpeeches, but intending to fhow in what eftimation he was holden by the Grecian criticks, and principally by the Halicarnaffian, the moft learned of them all ; from whom, however, I fhall more than once take leave to diffent.

Firdt, it is hard to conceive, why Dionyfius, in the very beginning of his treatife, the fole object of which was to difplay the peculiar excellence of Ifrus and the originality of his genius, fhould affert, that he was chiefly illuftrious for having given inftructions to Demofthenes: this is not only contradictory, but the fact itfelf is fo far from being true, that, if his pupil had never been born, his reputation would probably have been greater, and he would have been reckoned the firft orator of his age, or at leaft the next to Hyperides; for the judicious Hermogenes, whofe rhetorical tracts are fortunately preferved, places him far above Lyfias, and below none but Demofthenes, in that mode of fpeaking which he calls popular, and which alon= feems to be calculated for real ftruggles in active life, where genuine eloquence has the fulleft room to expand herfelf in bright and natural colours. It is furprifing too, that Ifæus fhould all along be reprefented as the imitator of Lyfias by the very author who exprefsly calls him, in his account of Dinarchus, the inventor of his oron original Ayle: he could not, indeed, but admire fo fine a compofer, who was about forty years older than himfelf, and had long enjoyed a very flourifhing reputation: he muft have ftudied the compofitions of Lyfias, and poffibly beyan with imitating them ; but finding them too foft and delicate for his forenfick combats, which required ftronger nerves and harfher features, he changed his courfe, and, taking nature alone for his guide, difcovered and purfued a new feecies of eloquence, which Demofthenes carried to fuch perfection, that no mortal will ever furpafs, nor perhaps equal, him, until the fame habits of induftry and folidity of judgement fhall be found united in one perfon with the fame fire of imagination and energy of language. One thing we muft neceffarily take to be true on the credit of Dionyfius ; that many fpeeches of Ifæus were hardly diftinguifhable from thofe of Lyfias; but they might have been his earlieft productions, or the fubjects of them might have required a fofter and more fimple ftrain.

The true comparifon between Lyfias and Ifæus appears to be this : purity, accuracy, propriety, concifenefs, perfpicuity (in the perfect mixture or rather union of which Hermogenes makes the popular ftyle confift), were common to both of them in an equal degree, and both poffeffed that roundnefs of expreffion, to which nothing could be added, and from which nothing could be removed without deftroying its juftnefs and fymmetry ; but the orations of Lyfias had all that fweet fimplicity, that exquifite grace, that clearneis, and, as it were, tranfparency, which characterized the genuine Attick diction, and which may be more eafily conceived than defined, admired than imitated; for it is analogous to gracefulnefs in motion, to melody in a feries of founds, and to beauty in the moft beautiful of all vifible objects, the human form: the lineaments of Ifæus were more dignified and manly, and his graces rather thofo of Mars than of Adonis; for Dionyfius obferves, that his figures were ftronger and more various, his compofition more forcible and impetuous, and that he furpaffed Lyfias in ardour and vehemence, as much as Lyfias excelled him in fimple and natural charms. In refpect to the form and order of their fpeeches, there appears to have been infinite art in both thofe orators ; but the Critick reprefents the art of Lyfias as more fubtile and recondite, that of Ifæus as more eafily difcoverable: according to him there was hardly a fpeech of my author, which had not the appearance of being premeditated and moulded into a fafhion the beft adapted to the purpofe of winning the minds of the jurymen, and of feducing their reafon, if he could not convince it ; but this alfo we muft take in great meafure upon truft, for farce any traces of this open and apparent art, with which both Ifrus and his pupil were reproached, are vifible to us in their compofitions, which breathe the firit of truth and juftice, and feem to have been dictated by nothing more than a natural animation. We may argue, however, as long as we pleafe: it is certain, that both Ifrus and Demofthenes had the reputation of being extremely fubtile advocates, a reputation by no means favourable at the bar, as it always diminifhes and frequently deftroys the confidence of the jury, who, through a fear of being deluded, are apt to fufpect a fnare in every argument of fuch a fpeaker: it is no lefs certain, that, in this refpect, the ancients allowed the fuperiority of Lyfias over all pleaders of caufes who ever exifted; for no artful arrangement appeared in his fpeeches, no formal divifions, no technical mode of reafoning; but he opened his cafe with a plainnefs that captivated his audience, whilft it enlightened them ; fo that, if Truth herfelf had affumed a human voice and form, fhe could have ufed no other language. Demofthenes and Ifxus, without having any thing forced or unnatural in their productions, took more pains than Lyfias in preparing the minds of the judges; in relating the facts which gave birth to the litigation ; in dividing the parts of their addrefs to the court; in marfhalling their evidence; in difpofing and enforcing their obfervations; in digreffing without deviation; in returning to the fubject without abruptnefs ; in amplifying; in aggravating ; in extenuating ; and, as Dionyfius fays particularly of Ifrus, in attacking their adverfaries, laying clofe fiege to the underftandings, and ftorming the paffions, of the jury; not omitting any thing that might tend to fecure the fruit of all forenfick labours, a verdict or judgement for their clients: for this purpofe, if the caufe was weak, no infinuation, no addrefs, no contrivance was neglected by Ifrus in order to fupport it ; but, when he happened to have juftice on his fide, his method feems to have been admirable. His manner of opening was various, according to the great variety of caufes in which he was employed; fometimes he told his fory in a natural order, with concifenefs and fimplicity, without preparation, without ornament, without any mixture of argumentation; fometimes he divided a long narration into feveral heads, proving each of them, as he went along; a method, of which he feems to have been fond, and which could not but conduce to the perfpicuity of his fpeeches: in all cafes he made frequent ufe of that oratorial fyllogifm, which logicians call epicbirema, where the premifes are refpectively proved by argument or evidence before the fpeaker draws his conclufion; while the enthymema, in which one propofition is fuppreffed, appears to have been more agreeable to the manner of Lyfias; and Dionyfius, indeed, mentions this as a flrong mark of difcrimination between the two advocates. His other modes of arguing, his anticipations, recapitulations, digreffions, inverfions, variations, tranfitions, were all happily and feafonably applied in conformity to the difpofition of his judges, and the natare of each particular cafe ; and here I cannot forbear adding the fketch of a fpeech, now unfortunately lof, againft ARISTOGITON and ARCHIPPUS, which the illufrious critick, whom I have fo frequently cited, has given us as a fpecimen of my author's method.

It was a caufe, in which the brother of a perfon deceafed, claiming a right to the fucceffion, ealled upon a ftranger for a difcovery and furrender of a perfonal eftate remaining in his hands: the defendant pleaded to the bill, that the defunct had bequeathed his perfonalty to him ; and hence arofe two queftions; firft, an iffue of fact, Whether any fuch bequeft had been made or not ; and, fecondly, an iffue of law, Who was entitled to the poffeflion of the goods in difpute pending a fuit concerning the exiftence or validity of the will. Ifrus, therefore, began with explaining the general doctrine on that fubject, and demonftrating in particular, that a devifee cannot legally polfefs the property devifed, until bis right be judicially eftablifbed; a point of A thenian law, which the reader will find illuftrated in one or two of the following fpeeches: thence he paffed to an inveftigation of the fact, and contended, that no will at all had been made by his brother: and this he proved, not by a fimple and continued relation of events, but, his narration being neceffarily long, he diftributed it into fections, calling witneffes, as he proceeded, to each head, producing his written evidence, as occafion required, and corroborating the whole with a number of arguments drawn from all the circumftances of the caufe, which he fupported.

Various other examples are cited by Dionyfius from the works of both orators in illuftration of his criticifm; and they are all fo appofite, that I fhould be glad to entertain the Englifh reader with them, if it were not almof impoffible to convey in our language an adequate notion of the nice diftinction between the different originals: it is very polfible, I hope, to give in a tranflation fome general idea of an author's peculiar manner, and the caft of his compofition ; but it would be no eafy talk to find words and fentences exactly correfpondent with the Greek, and to pronounce that, if Lyfias and Ifrus had been Englifhmen, the firf would have felected fuch a word or fuch a phrafe on account of its fimplicity, which the other would have rejected in favour of one more energetick and fonorous. The diverfity between them, in regard to the difpofition of their arguments, might, indeed, be made plainly difcernable in any other ton ue ; but, after full confideration, I refolved to fubjoin the fragments of Ifæus, without tranflating any of Lyfias, efpecially as moft of his orations may now be read in Englifh, with no lefs pleafure than advantage, by any one who fhall think proper to compare him with my author. Had more of their productions been preferved, we fhould have feen more clearly the propricty of the comparifon with which the critick of Halicarnaffus illuftrates his obfervations; for he declares his opinion, that the fpeeches of Lyfias refemble ancient pieces of painting in the fimplicity of their colours and the graceful correctnefs of their outlines, while thofe of Ifæus are like the more modern pictures, which are lefs accurately drawn, but finifhed with bolder Atrokes of the pencil, decorated with a greater variety of tints, and enlivened with a ftronger oppofition of light and fhade.

On the whole, the orator Pytheas might have reproached Demofthenes with fome reafon for having transferred into his practice and manner of fpeaking the artifices and fubtilty of his mafter; but Dionyfrus himfelf may go too far, in faying that the confummate art of Ifrus and his pupil made them liable to fufpicion, even when truth and equity were on their fide, while the plainnefs of Ifocrates and Lyfias gave even a bad caufe the colour of juftice and reafon; as if a glowing and rapid ftyle, or a juft arrangement of topicks, could have been fufpected of impofture more than the fly infinuating air of candour and opennefs, which the moft artful-men often affume.

I cannot leave this fubject, without combating in few words an opinion of Cicero, intimated in all his rhetorical pieces, and expreffed very roundly in that little fragment, which feems to have been part of a preface to his tranfation of Demofthenes and Efchines for and againft Ctefipho, but the authenticity of which was doubted by Manutius. It begins with a pofitive affertion, that " there are no diftinct fpecies of ora" tory, as there are of poetry; that, although a " tragick, and epick, and a lyrick, poet may be " all equally perfect in their feveral ways, yet " that no man can juftly be called a fpeaker, " unlefs he unite in the higheft degree the pow" ers of inftructing, delighting, and moving, " every audience on every fubject." A character fo various, and a genius fo comprehenfive, muft neceffarily be the object, if ever it fhould exif, of general admiration; but why it is not fufficient to call fuch a man the greateft, without infifting that he is the only, orator, or why an advocate, who never applied his talents to the fenatorial fpecies of eloquence, may not attain perfection in the forenfick, and fo converfely, I am at a lofs to comprehend. Menander, you fay, would not bave defired to be like Homer; certainly not in his comedies; but every Speaker wijbes to refemble Demofthenes; as certainly not, when he is addrefling the jury on the obftruction of ancient lights or the diverfion of a watercourfe. The kinds of fpeaking are different; and, though one of them be more exalted than another, yet orators, as well as poets, may in thofe different kinds feverally reach the fummit; and this analogy may be extended to all the fine arts: Myro was not a lefs perfect fculptor in marble, becaufe he was unable probably to finifh gems with the delicacy of Trypho ; nor, to fpeak of modern artifts, will Rafaelle ever be degraded from his high rank among painters, becaufe he might not have been able to draw Cupids and Nymphs with the minute elegance of Albani ; in the fame manner as Demofthenes will always be allowed to have hurled the thunder of Grecian eloquence, although he could not perhaps (whatever Tully may fuggef to the contrary) have fpoken with the fimple graces of Lyfias. Philofophers may refine, and logicians may diftinguifh, as learnedly and fubtilly as they pleafe; it will, after all, be true, that the eloquence of a fenator is of a fpecies wholly different from the eloquence of an advocate ; that the two kinds ought never to be confounded ; and that a complete fpeaker before a jury or a fingle judge may ftrain his throat without effect in a popular affembly. If Cicero, indeed, meaned no more than that the title of orator fhould be given only to one, who, like himfelf, excels all men in every way, the argument is reduced to a mere difpute about words, which every writer may apply as he thinks proper, provided he apprize his reader of the new fenfe in which he means to ufe them; but, furely, he might have afferted, with equal propriety, that he alone, who furpaffes the reft of mankind in every fort of poetry, deferves the appellation of a poet; for nothing can be more exact than the analogy between the two arts, and their near alliance is often acknowledged by the great man himfelf, with whofe opinions I am taking fo much liberty: had he faid that by the word orator he meaned a fpeaker, who had cultivated every branch of his art, the Romans might have thought this an innovation in their language, but they would, perhaps, have adopted the definition on his authority. We are not however contending about the proper application of terms, or the abftract idea of univerfal genius: the fingle queftion is, Whether there are not diffinct fpecies of oratory as there are of poetry, and whether a man may not be perfect in any one or more of them, without having directed his talents to the cultivation of the reft; for the decifion of which point, I appeal to fuch of my readers as have heard ten fpeeches at our Englifh bar, and as many in either houfe of parliament. They will forgive me for having applied, and for fill applying, the word orator to IS EUS, although his eloquence was wholly forenfick; and I confer this title on him with more confidence, becaufe there is reafon to believe, that he fometimes delivered his own fpeeches, without confining himfelf entirely to the difficult, but lefs noble, tafk of compofing for others; for I muft confefs, that I can form no idea of an orator without elocution and action, nor can the praife of eloquence be jufly, or even without a folecifm, be beftowed on mere invention and compofition, which conftitute indeed the body of oratory, but fpeech and gefture alone can give it a foul. Whether the remaining works of my author will juftify the criticifm of Dionyfius and Hermogenes, or whether my interpretation of them may not have weakened their original force, muft be left to the impartial judgement of the reader; but this advantage will naturally refult from my prefent publication: if the following fpeeches fhould be thought manly, nervous, acute, pertinent, and better in moft refpects than the generality of addreffes to an Englifh jury on fimilar fubjects, we fhall have a kind of model, by which the fudent may form himfelf, allowing for the difference of Athenian laws and manners; and, if they fhould appear inferior in all thofe qualities to the fpeeches ufually delivered by our leading advo-Cates, we fhall have reafon to congratulate our age and country, and to triumph in the fuperiority of our talents; for our leaders often make the ableft and moft fpirited replies without a poffibility of premeditation; and wonderful, indeed, muft be the parts and eloquence of thofe, whofe unprepared effufions equal or furpafs the ftudied compofitions of the ancient orators.

In whatever eftimation IS EUS may be holden by his tranflator's contemporaries, it is certain that he ftood very high in the opinion of his own : but the fate of his works has not correfponded with the fame, which they procured him, while he lived : fince, for the reafons before affigned, they were fo much neglected in the darker ages, that no part of his fifty feeeches, which were extant in the time of Photius, is known to exift at prefent, except what this volume contains, with about a hundred detached words and phrafes explained by Harpocration and one or two other grammarians: even thefe ten fpeeches would in all probability have perifhed with the reft, if it had not pleafed fome man of letters to copy them ; and it is much to be wifhed that he had added at leaft two more, one on the eftate of Archipolis, and another on that of Menecles; for we fhould then have had a complete collection of the orations called $\kappa \lambda$ norxoi, or relating to the fubject of legal and teftamentary fucceffion. This copy, however, was repofited in the library belonging to a monaftery in Mount Athos, whence it was brought to Florence at the beginning of the fixteenth century by Lafcaris, who had been fent to Greece by Lorenzo di Medici to purchafe manufcripts; and it is preferved at this moment in the Medicean collection. Five years after the book was in Italy, it was printed at Venice, with fome other orations, by the indefatigable ALDUS MANUTIUS, who gives the preceding account of it in his preface ; and it may be prefumed, that his edition, upon which the curious fet a high value, is a very exact impreffion of the manufcript with all its inaccuracies. Towards the clofe of the fame century, the celebrated HENRI ETIENNE, whom we have naturalized and call Henry Stephens, reprinted the Aldine edition of the Greek orators with fome judicious notes in the margin ; but he feems to have taken more pains with Æfchines and Lyfias than with the others, and Ifæus appeared under his infpection with fearce any greater advantage than that of a very handfome drefs: this editor, in his epifte dedicatory, promifed to collect all the Attick laws with a comparifon between them and the inflitutions of modern nations; a work, which would have thrown an advantageous light on my author, but which unhappily he never completed. Many eminent fcholars, who afterwards poffeffed this elegant edition, among whom were Scaliger and Saumaife, fcribbled a few hafty conjectures in the margin of Ifæus; but the world at large knew little of his ten fpeeches for above forty years, until one ALPHONSUS MINIATUS, as he calls himfelf, undertook, in the feventy-third year of his age, to tranllate them into Latin: his attempt was highly laudable; but it is clear, that he underfood neither the language from which, nor that into which, he tranflated; for every page of his verfion abounds with blunders fo ridiculous, that, if any man can ftoop to divert himfelf at the expence of another, he cannot find better fport than by reading Miniatus; and Schott of Antwerp, who profeffed a friendfhip for him, but muft have known his ignorance, did wrong in fuffering the old man to expofe himfelf by fuch a publication. The accurate Perizonius, whofe differtations contain many excellent remarks on my author, complained fome time after, that the very ufeful Speeches of IJaus, which bis illiterate interpreter, Miniatus, bad moft unkilfully rendered, lay fandalouly neglected; and Fabricius expreffed his wifh, that a very good fcholar, whom he names, would prefent the world with a new tranflation of them : but even thefe publick remonftrances could not attract the attention of learned men to a work, which they thought interefting to lawyers only; and Taylor, who publifhed his Elements of Civil Law little more than twenty years ago, fpeaks of my author as a writer then hardly known: "When I quoted Ifaus, fays " he, I would fuggeft to my readers, that I men"tioned an author upon many accounts very "valuable, but upon none fo much as of the " great light, that he is capable of throwing " upon the queftion before us, de jure baredita"rio; a fubject, in which the orations, that are " left of him, moft remarkably abound." It is probable, that fo ftrong a recommendation from fo judicious a writer produced fome effect among the fcholars of his time ; but Ifæus was ftill an obfcure name, till REISKE of Leipzick, about five years ago, publifhed the originals of the following fpeeches, together with the treatife of Dionyfius, in his elaborate edition of the Greek orators. As I have confiderable obligations to this learned and laborious man, whom I mention here merely as the editor of Ifæus, without entering upon the other parts of his work, I think it better to make this general acknowledgement of them, than to moleft the reader with a fuperfluity of notes, efpecially as my opinion of his particular corrections may be always afcertained by my tranflation of the text; and it muft be owned, that although many of his annotations are hafty and even puerile, yet moft of them are candid, plaufible, ingenious; and fome of his conjectural emendations are wonderfully happy: his interpretation, indeed, is a prolix paraphrafe in very harfh Latin; but, as it fhows his apprehenfion of the author's meaning, and, as that apprehenfion feems to be generally right, let us be fatisfied with the utility of a performance, in which elegance was not to be expected. It is with pleafure that I take this opportunity of giving a due fhare of praife to fo well-intentioned and induftrious a man, who, although he was not without the pride and petulance which too often accompany erudition, fufficiently atoned for thofe faults by the integrity of his heart and the intenfenefs of his application to the ftudy of ancient literature, which his labours have confiderably improved and promoted. To his valuable work we certainly owe the late excellent verfion of Demofthenes and Afchines by the Abbé AUGER, who promifes alfo a tranflation of my author; and, as my Englifh Ifæus has the fortune to fee the light before the French, I fhall be happy if it can afford any help to fo refpectable a fcholar, who, difdaining the prejudices of an academician, and daring to exprefs his own juft fentiments, has the courage to recommend the learning and language of Athens in the heart of Paris; nor fhall I blufh to confefs any errors that I may have committed, and, with the aid of his interpretation, to correct my own.

As to my work, I fhall fay very little concerning it, but fairly fubmit the whole to the judgement of the publick; for I never could approve the cuftom of authors, who, in their prefatory difcourfes, lay down rules of perfect writing, to which they infinuate that their own productions are ftricdly conformable. I will not, therefore, fay with Cicero, if indeed he wrote the fragment beforementioned, that $I$ bave tranflated Ifaus not as an interpreter but as an orator; nor with Middleton, who was fond of imitating Ci cero, that I bave made it my firft care, always to preferve the fentiment, and my next, to adbere to the words as far as I was able to exprefs them in an eafy and natural fiyle. I am fully perfuaded, that there is but one golden rule for good tranflation; which is, to read the original fo frequently, and fuludy it fo carefully, as to imprint on the mind a complete idea of the author's peculiar air and diftinguifhing features; and then to affume, as it were, his perfon, voice, countenance, gefture; and to reprefent the man himfelf fpeaking in our language inftead of his own: but, whether I have acted the part of ISEUS with exactnefs, whether I have juftly expreffed the peculiarity of his character, whether my ftyle conveys an adequate notion of his nerves and fipit, his vigour and fharpnefs, I really cannot tell; nor, if I could, would it become me to tell my reader. One requeit only I muft beg leave to make: that, if any perfon fhould conceive it an eafy matter to tranflate into Englifh the ancient orators of Greece, and fhould perfift in that opinion while he reads my tranflation, he will inftantly lay afide my book, take up the original, and render the next fpeech himfelf: if he fhould find the tafk more difficult than he had imagined, he will then give me the only praife, which I defire, that of having taken no fmall pains to inform and entertain my countrymen; to whom, if opportunity alone had not been wanting, I would long ago have made many greater facrifices-But of myfelf enough has been faid; and, I hope, without impropriety.

I now refume the fubject, from which I have fo long digreffed, and return to the Attick laws of hereditary and teftamentary tranfmiffions: the text of which, together with a few other ordinances nearly related to them, I fhall prefix to the fpeeches, referving a fuller explanation of them for the commentary; it being my fole object, in this introductory differtation, to prepare my reader for compofitions above two thoufand years old, and to explain fuch allufions as may occur in them, fo that he may underftand them without the perpetual interruption of notes: with this intent I fhall now fubjoin a fhort fketch of an Athenian fuit for the recovery of property in the court of HELIEA, the only one of the ten, which my prefent fubject leads me to confider. A more minute account of a lawfuit at Athens, from the original procefs to final judgement, would have been fuperfluous in this place, and even inconfiftent with the fcope of my work; but, fhould the curiofity of any learned reader be raifed by this fummary, he will receive ample information from various tracts in the vaft repofitory of Gronovius, among which I principally recommend the elegant treatife of CAROLUS SIGONIUS, On the Athenian Republick: that moft judicious antiquary has, indeed, fo completely exhaufted the fubject, that POTTER has done little more than tranflate his work with fome additional authorities and a multitude of quotations, which are fo far: from improving his book, that they render it in-tolerably dry and tedious. M. Auger profeffes to have followed Potter and Petit, and has extracted from their rude materials a very perfpicuous and agreeable differtation on the jurifdiction and laws of Athens. I have turned them all over with as much attention as it feemed worth while to give them ; but my remarks are chiefly drawn from the pure fource of the Greek orators themfelves, and from their beft interpreter, Harpocration. I cannot help grieving, that the Commentaries on Ifaus by DIDYMUS have not furvived the days of Gothick barbarity; for, although they were probably nothing more than glofies or grammatical notes, yet they would have been of infinite ufe in illuftrating many dark paffages, and fixing the purity of the text. The works too of HERO the Athenian, who wrote a treatife On lawfuits at Athens, and another $O n$ the forenfick contefts of the old Jpeakers, would have given me no lefs entertainment and inftruction than affiftance in compofing this part of my preface; and the fame may be faid of two lof books by TELEPHUS, the firt, On the laws and cuftoms of the Athenians, and the fecond, On their courts of judicature; but, inftead of wafting time in fruitlefs regret, I proceed to difcourfe concifely on the fame fubject by the help of fuch imperfect light as remains.

It is almoft needlefs to premife, what every perfon who has the flighteft acquaintance with the conftitution of Athens already knows, that all caufes concerning inheritances, devifes, legacies, portions, adoptions, marriages, divorces, alimony, widows, heirefles, orphans, guardians, belonged to the jurifdiction of the chief ARCHON, who gave his name to the year of his magiftracy, and was thence often called Eponymus ; a jurifdiction, which may in part be traced through the Decemviral laws to that of the Roman PRETOR, and from him, through the imperial and pontifical conflitutions, to that of our CHANCELLOR. Either this great magiftrate, whofe tribunal was in the Odeum, or one of the fix inferior Archons, called Thefinotbete, generally fat, crowned with myrtle, for the purpofe of receiving complaints from perfons injured, of directing procefs, examining the parties, allowing or difallowing the action, and conducting the fuit through its various ftages; for, when a citizen thought himfelf wronged, and refolved to feek redrefs in a court of juftice, his firft ftep was to prefer his plaint and denounce the name of his adverfary to the fitting magiftrate, who examined the complainant, and, if he thought the action maintainable, permitted him to fummon the defendant to appear at a certain day: it was allowable, where an expeditious remedy was required, to attach the perfon complained againft, and carry him directly before the court, of which the reader will recollect many inftances in the ancient comedies, where the feene is ufually laid at Athens; but, in moft cafes of civii injuries, the firft procefs was by citation or fummons, for which purpofe a number of apparitors or bailiffs, called fummoners, were conftantly at hand; nor can we fuppofe, that in a fmall ftate governed almoft wholly by laws, which inflicted a fevere punifhment on contumacy, this monition of the Archon was often difobeyed: contumacious perfons were declared infamous, a fentence no lefs dreadful to an Athenian, than outlawry to an Englifhman.

When both parties were confronted before the magiftrate, he proceeded to a ftrict examination of them, which was called the interrogation, and the parties litigant were at liberty to interrogate one another, as we learn from the fpeech on the eftate of Pbiloctemon; whence alfo we may collect, that their anfwers were fet down in writing, and might be given in evidence againft them at the trial, and that, if the Archon found it neceffary, he might adjourn the examination. This was not unlike the French recollement, of which M. de Beaumarchais has given us a lively and curious defcription in one of his interefting memorials; and the ftudent will find it an inftructive and agreeable exercife to compare thefe judicial proceedings at Athens, not only with thofe of the civilians and canonifts, of which he will fee an exact fketch in Sir Jeffrey Gilbert's Forum Romanum, but alfo with thofe in our own courts of law and equity, and with the modes of bringing caufes to a hearing: in Scotland and France: to remind him at every turn of the analogy between thefe different forms of adminifering remedial juftice, would be both idly oftentatious and inconfiftent with my principal defign.

It was the Archon who gave the complainant the power of impleading his antagonift, prefcribed the proper form of the action, of which the Athenians had a great variety, and, to ufe their term, admitied the caufe into court ; after which preliminaries the party complaining put in, as I conceive, his declaration, or bill, in which he fet forth pertinently and fuccinctly the nature of the injury which he had fuftained; and then, I imagine, the parties proceeded to their mutual altercations, which the Archon moderated and directed, and which, like our ancient pleadings, were delivered orally before his tribunal. If the plaintiff perfevered in demanding redrefs, and the defendant infifted generally, that he bad committed no injury, or that be bad a right to the property in quefion, fo that the merits of the caufe might be fairly tried in a direct courfe, iffue was then joined, as by the Sponfio of the Romans, and each party depofited a fated fum as a pledge of profecuting his claim: nor was this all ; for the parties were obliged to give in crofs-depofitions, in which they refpectively fwore, that they relied on the juftice of their feveral cafes, and would produce evidence of the truth. The Archon then enquired into the nature of that evidence, afked the parties, if they were prepared with their witneffes, and what was the number of them ; for, if either of them was unprepared and could offer upon oath a juft excufe for his want of readinefs, the trial might be poftponed. This was alfo the time for propofing terms reciprocally in regard to the litigation, as by written cballenges to produce their flaves, whofe teftimony was always extorted by pain or by the apprehenfion of it, and who could not be expofed to torture without the confent of their mafters, which was rarely given; but the party refufing to confent gave an advantage to his adverfary, who, inftead of afcribing his refufal to humanity, conftantly imputed it to a dread of difclofing the whole tranfaction ; of which common topick we fee a remarkable inftance in the Traperitick fpeech of Ifocrates, whofe very words are found in that of Ifrus on the eftate of Ciron, and in the firft of Demofthenes againft Aphobus: this identical paffage in the three orators is adduced by Eufebius among other inftances of the grofs plagiarifm with which he charges the Greeks; but it is a paffage which, to the honour of our nation, can never be copied by a Britifh advocate.

It was competent, however, to the defendant, to put in a dilatory plea, as for inftance, to the jurifdicition of the magintrate ; or to demur, as we call it, to the declaration, by infifting that the action was not maintainable, or, in the language of the Athenians, not sirayuripo or admifible; or he might plead in bor any fact that precluded the plaintiff from his fuit, as a compromife and releafe, or the expiration of the limited time within which the complaint fhould have been preferred: this was in general fove years; but the law of limitations doth not feem to have been very rigoroufly obferved, as excufes for the non-claim were often made, and fometimes, probably, admitted. From this law there arifes no fmall difficulty in the feech on the eftate of PYRRHUS, whofe adopted fon Endius had been in poffeffion above twenty years, yet, on his death, an attempt was made to invalidate the adoption by protefting that Pyrrhus had a legitimate daughter: now one would have imagined, that, had the been really legitimate, fhe would have been perpetually barred by not having entered on the eftate, or oppofed the claim of Endius, within the due time from the death of her father ; but the five years only ran from the day when a new title accrued, and, fhe having paffed the time of entering as daugbter of Pyrrhus, her hufband might have made a claim for her as fifer and heirefs of Endius lately deceafed. However that might be, this caufe affords a good fpecimen of Athenian pleading; for, in the original fuit, Xenocles appears to have been complainant in right of his wife Phila, and to have demanded in his bill the three talents, of which her father died poffeffed: to this the defendant, who was the mother of Endius, pleaded, that fhe was the fifter of Pyrthus, and, on the death of his adopted fon with out heirs, became entitled to his eftate: Xenocles replied, in the form called diaurefofia or a protefation, that fhe had no title, becaufe Pyrrbus bad left a legitimate daugbter: this the defendant traverfed or denied; and, as the iffue was found in her favour, the complainant, who had protefted upon oath, muft neceffarily have been perjured. I chofe to give this Attick form the name of proteftation, although obteftation be more literal, and although the former word be reftrained in our law to a parenthetical allegation, which is not traverfable; but I cannot too often requeft the reader of Ifous to place himfelf at Athens, and to drop for a time all thoughts of our own forenfick dialect. This proteftation then, which anfwered fometimes to a demurrer, and fometimes to a fpecial plea in bar, differed from the $\pi$ apxygapi or exception; for the firft might be entered by either of the contending parties, or even by a third perfon inter vening; as, in the litigation concerning the eftate of Dicæogenes, when Menexenus and his coufins were going to join iffue with their adverfary, Leochares put in a proteftation, that the beirs at law were precluded from claiming the in beritance: but the exception, which in general was a dilatory plea, could only be made by the defendant. Thefe oblique modes of pleading were, however, confidered as unfair, and were therefore difcountenanced, as tending to divert the ftream of juftice, and to evade a candid inveftigation of the whole truth: thus Thrafyllus, in the fixth fpeech, makes a merit of having pleaded in a direct form, when it was in his power to have protefled fpecially, that he was the adopted fon of Apollodorus; and, in the fifth, the fame topick is urged in favour of Chxreftratus, whofe advacate infifts, that his opponent, inftead of protefting, that Philoctemon had left legitimate fons, fhould have denied at once the validity or exiftence of his will. It feems that, in all cafes of difputed eftates, every devifee, and every heir, except a lineal defeendant, was compelled to make a claim by exhibiting a bill to the Archon: if his title was controverted, the adverfe claimant prefented a crofsbill, called $\alpha \dot{\sim} \eta \gamma_{\rho} \alpha \rho_{n}$, and it appears from the laft mentioned caure, that this courfe might be purfued by a perfon who had protefted, even after the iffue on his proteftation had been found againft him; whence it follows, that a multiplicity of trials was prevented by the sibusixio or general plea. We may collect alfo from a paffage in the fourth of the following fpeeches, as well as from Harpocration, that when a ftranger interpofed by protefing, that the eftate was not ? $\boldsymbol{e}$ idix(c) or open to controver $\int y$, it was ufual to difcontinue the original action, and to try the iffue joined on the proteftation, the event of which trial muft have directed the judgement in the firft caufe: what follows that paffage is extremely fingular ; for, when Leochares was more than half-convicted of perjury, the punifhment of which was a perpetual deprivation of all civil rights, the plaintiff not only was permitted to decline taking the verdict, but even confented to accept the promife of Leochares himfelf, that Dicæogenes fhould furrender the property in difpute.

Whenever, in the courfe of thefe pleadings, the parties came to a fact or a point of law (for both were determined by the fame judges) afferted on one fide and denied on the other, the Archon proceeded, as if the defendant had pleaded generally: and all the writings in the caufe, the bills, claims, crofs-depofitions, challenges, proteftations, and exceptions, together with fuch inftruments as had been exhibited, and, I believe, with the depofitions of the witneffes, were enclofed in a veffel called $\varepsilon \chi$ iot which could not be opened till it was carried into court.

Thus was a caufe at Athens prepared for trial, and, we muft acknowledge, in a fimple and expeditious manner; nor was the popular form of pleading the general iffue, and proving the fpecial matter in court, liable to the objection of expofing the parties to the danger of being furprized with an unforefeen cafe or unexpected evidence; fince all the circumftances were previoufly fifted, and the depofitions accurately fettled, in the prefence of the Archon, fo that each party was fully aware of his adverfary's ftrength, and able to inftruct his advocate without darknefs or perplexity: yet if we confider the multitude of law-fuits, with which, as Ifæus himfelf informs us, Athens abounded, it muft appear ftrange how fix or feven magiftrates, even with their affeffors, could have time to conduct the altercation of fo many litigants, and to perform the other important duties of their office. At Weftminfter a fimilar plan would be found impracticable; nor fhall I eafily be induced to wifh for a change of our prefent forms, how intricate foever they may feem to thofe who are ignorant of their utility. Our fcience of fpecial pleading is an excellent Logick; it is admirably calculated for the purpofes of analyfing a caufe, of extracting, like the roots of an equation, the true points in difpute, and referring them with all imaginable fimplicity to the court or the jury: it is reducible to the ftricteft rules of pure dialectick, and, if it were fcientifically taught in our publick feminaries of learning, would fix the attention, give a habit of reafoning clofely, quicken the apprehenfion, and invigorate the underftanding, as effectually as the famed Peripatetick fyitem, which, how ingenious and fubtile foever, is not fo bonourable, fo laudable, or fo profitable, as the fcience, in which Littleton exhorts his fons to employ their courage and care. It may unqueftionably be perverted to very bad purpofes; but fo may the nobleft arts, and even eloquence itfelf, which many virtuous men have for that reafon decried : there is no fear, however, that either the contracted fift, as Zeno ufed to call it, or the expanded palm, can do any real mifchief, while their blows are directed and reftrained by the fuperintending power of a court.-But let us return to Athens.

The next act of the Archon was to caft lots for the judges, on whom I chufe in general to confer that title, becaufe they determined not the fact only, but the law and equity, of every cafe: although I have always been of opinion with the learned antiquary Dr. PETTINGAL, that they might with propriety be called jury-r men; and that the Athenian juries differed from ours in very few particulars. It is well known, that the $\Delta x \alpha \alpha^{\alpha}$ were a ftanding body of citizens, all at leaft thirty years old and of unblemifhed character, but without any fated qualification in point of fortune: before they were admitted into the order of judges, they fwore folemnly, among other things, " that they would never " accept a bribe directly or indirectly for pro" nouncing their fentence, nor fuffer any of " their fellows to be bribed, with their know${ }^{6}$ ledge, by any artifice or contrivance what" ever; that they would impartially attend to " both plaintiff and defendant, and give a juft " verdict on the very point in iffue;" which oath, as we may collect from Demofthenes, they repeated before every trial, and the advocates feldom failed to remind them of it. The number of their names drawn by lot, in caufes to be tried in the Heliæa, was ufually five hundred, as we learn from the fourth fpeech of Ifxus; but, on very important occafions, a thoufand, fifteen hundred, and fometimes two thoufand, fat to decide the fame caufe ; fo that they formed in reality a committee from the whole legiflative body, and hence they are frequently preffed. by the orators to be guided by the laws which they had themfelves enacted: it is on account of their ample powers and their mixed character, that I call their fentence indifferently a judgement, a verdict, or a decree; although at our bar we appropriate each of thofe words to a diftinct meaning. The fentence was determined by the plurality of fuffrages; but the nearer the court approached to unanimity, the more brilliant was the victory; and as he, who had not a fifth part of the votes, was fined a thoufand drachmas, I conceive, that the parties were allowed to challenge fuch of the jurors as they could affect with a reafonable fufpicion of a bias to either fide. When the judges, on the day appointed, took their feats in the Helicea, a place in the open air, but furrounded with a rope and attended by officers who kept off the croud, the Archon propofed or introduced the caufe; and, if the defendant made default, judgement was given againft him ; but it was not final till two months had paffed, within which time he might apply to the magiftrate, and, by affigning on oath a fatisfactory reafon for his abfence, might fet it afide, and have another day fixed for the trial. When the parties appeared, they ufually brought with them as many powerful friends as they could affemble, with a view, no doubt, of influencing the jury; a. fhameful cuftom! but which cannot eafily be prevented in any country, and which feems to have been common at Athens, as we find in fome of the old comedies, and in the beginning of the feech on the eftate of Cleonymus: they were accompanied alfo by their advocates and witneffes, of whom it will be neceffary to fpeak with as much concifenefs as the fubject will admit.

The office of ruvingoper was diftinct from that of $\begin{gathered} \\ \xi \\ \text { nnrins ; }\end{gathered}$ as the firft was the actor caufarum, and the fecond the jurifconfultus, of the Romans; both which characters are generally united in our counfel: I call the firft an advocate; although I have no certain knowledge that the Athenian title was given to men' of a particular profeffion; but am inclined to think, that any man whatever, whom friendihip or ability recommended to either party, might, with the permiffion of the court, plead his caufe before the judges; nor do I believe, that this bufinefs was in general confidered as reputable; for Nicodemus, who feems to have been a very profligate fellow, is reproached by Ifrus in the feeond fpeech, for acting difhoneftly, in hopes of the petty fees, which he gained by pleading caufes; and, in the eighth, Xencenetus and his affociates, whom my author reprefents as a deteftable crew, are faid to have had fuch powers in fpeaking, that they were often employed as advocates. The pintopss were of a higher clafs; many of them, illuftrious ftatefmen; and all, men of diftinguifhed abilities, who were frequently engaged in private caufes, either at the requeft of particular friends, or, like the Roman fenators, who were forbidden to take money by the Cincian law, with a view of acquiring fame and popularity: but Antipho of Rhamnus is faid to have been the firft who took fees for his forenfick labours. When the orators addreffed the court in perfon, they were affifted, as Tully fays, in matters of law by folicitors or agents, who were called wрaүнатimoi, and whofe profeffion was reckoned illiberal; but, moft commonly, the fpeeches were compofed by the great mafters of rhetorick, and delivered either by memory or from writing, by the clients themfelves, or fome of their intimate friends: for the Athenians were naturally quick; their general affembly was the beft fchool of eloquence in the world ; and, as they had but one language to learn, which was the fineft ever fpoken by mortals, the loweft among them could not only exprefs themfelves with propriety, but were even the niceft judges of the pure Attick diction, Plutarch tells us, in his treatife on Garrulity, that Lyfias wrote a fpeech for a client, who brought it back with great marks of uneafinefs, affuring the orator, that, "when be might, perhaps, depend too much upon his vigilance, attention, and fagacity: on the whole, we proceed better, I think, without any fuch reftraint.

It does not appear, that two or more advocates were ever heard at Athens on the fame fide, as they were at Rome, and commonly are with us on legal queftions. Cicero, in his pleafing book on Famous Orators, objects warmly to this practice; but his objections, in my apprehenfion, are not weighty: when he was a boy, there were but fix advocates in the fulleft bufinefs ; nor have we many more, who are fure to be retained in every caufe of great importance; to determine who are the Craffus and Antonius, who the Philippus and Cæfar, who the Cotta and Sulpicius, of our Englifh bar, would be a tafk no lefs invidious than unneceffary; but if the moft eminent were always to fpeak without any fubalterns, a young barrifter might be condemned at Weftminfter to a filence of twenty years.

If the reader has but opened the following: work, he muft have obferved, that the Athenian advocates called their witnefies and read their depofitions, as they went along, in proof of their feveral points, inftead of crouding all their evidence together at the conclufion of their fpeeches; and, although eloquence flows more agreeably and oftentatiouily in a continued fream, yet their method feems better calculated than ours for the purpofe of enlightening and convincing the jury; fince, as Dionyfius remarks, a number of proofs collected in one place, and belonging to a variety of beads, is inconfifent with per $\int$ picuity. The witneffes were examined, and, I doubt not, crofs-examined, in the preparatory ftages of the caufe; but they were not fworn till the day of the trial, when they took the oath together at the altar with all poffible folemnity, and were afterwards called before the tribunal to confirm their depofitions, or, if neceffary, to correct and explain them; fo that the practice of the Athenians happily united the advantages of both oral and written teftimony. This was the form of a depofition in one of their moft celebrated caufes: "SOSIA depofes, "that Calliftratus, his wife's father, was firft " coufin to Polemo, the father of Hagnias, and ss to Charidemus, the father of Theopompus; "that his mother was fecond coufin to Polemo; " and that fhe often told him, that Phylomache, " the mother of Eubulides, was fifter of the " whole blood to Polemo, the father of Hag"nias, and that the faid Polemo never had a " brother." They admitted, we fee, hearfay evidence eyen of particlar facts, as it appears alfo from the fpeech on the eftate of Ciron; and, when it was expedient to perpetuate the teftimony of perfons going abroad or likely to be detained by ficknefs, it was ufual, in the prefence of reputable witneffes, to take their depofitions, which were called ixpugerugias, and might afterwards be read when the caufe was ripe for a hearing. If a witnefs was fummoned, he was obliged to attend the trial under pain of perpetual infamy ; and, if he was really ignorant of the facts in queftion, the court permitted him to abjure, or fwear that he knew nothing of the matter ; but, if he would neither give evidence nor abjure, the law condemned him to pay a fine of above five-and-thirty pounds, a fum by no means inconfiderable in a country where money was extremely fcarce: thus Hierocles protefts his ignorance of a material fact in the caufe concerning the eftate of Aftypbilus, where the fenfe directs us to read 'E $\xi_{\omega} \mu \cdot \sigma \cdot{ }^{\prime} \alpha$, or abjuration, inftead of Maprupia, or evidence, which he refufed to give. I am perfuaded, that objections were frequently made to the competence of witneffes; and, when they were received, many arguments were ufed and fingular proofs adduced by the adverfe party to affect their credibility: thus the feventh fpeech of Ifrus clofes with a violent attack upon Diocles, whom the orator accufes of the moft atrocious crimes, and even produces evidence that he had been a difhoneft guardian and an adulterer.

In the admiffion of evidence they feem to have indulged an extraordinary latitude; as in the firft caufe, on the revocation of a will, they heard proof of an opinion declared by the friends and relations of the devifees, that the property of Cleonymus ought to be divided among the contending parties; and many other fingularities of this kind will be feen in the reft of the fpeeches: but we muft never forget, that the dixasai were judges of fact, law, and equity, with ample powers of deciding according to the juftice of every cafe; fo that the parties were permitted in general to prove whatever tended to place them in a favourable light; and this accounts for the popular topicks to the jury, which occur fo often in Ifæus, Demothenes, and Lyfias, that their clients had contributed largely to defray the expenfes of the ftate, had furnifhed gallies, ferved chargeable offices, given handfome entertainments, and lived parfimonioufly in private, that they might act liberally in publick, while their adverfaries either concealed their fortunes, or were remifs and penurious in their contributions; topicks, which no advocate in his fenfes would urge before judges of the bench, but which feem well adapted to the conftitution at the courts at Athens, where the democracy could never have flourifhed, unlefs all the citizens had vied with each other in fupporting it; and, as in fome ftates certain offenders are excluded from the protection of the law, fo in a republick few offences can deferve that exclufion more juftly than a want of zealous affection to the commonwealth. After all, we have no reafon to regret, that, in private caufes at leart, an Englifhman is fure to obtain juftice, although he may not have paid his annual taxes with eagernefs, or ferved the office of fheriff with great alacrity ; and we may tri-umph in our elegant and philofophical theory of evidence, which Ariftotle and Plato muft have admired, and by the frict rules of which all trials in the world ought to be directed.

A few other particularities will be remarked in the feeches of Ifrus ; as, an appeal by Menexenus to the knowledge of the jurors themfelves, concerning fome tranfactions at a former trial; witnefles, who happened to be prefent, called upon to give evidence for Ciron's grandfon; allufions by the brother of Aftyphilus to what was paffing in court; the profecutor openly interrogated by Theopompus at the beginning of his defence : moft of thefe circumftances are inconfiftent with fet fpeeches compofed by the orator and pronounced by the party ; and one would almoft be tempted to conjecture, that the advocate himfelf fpoke in the perfon and character of his client, if the fory before cited from Plutarch and other authorities were not decifive of the contrary.

When the defendant had clofed his fpeech (for I find no certain traces of any reply by the complainant) the jurymen gave their fentence by cafting pellets or beans into the urns allotted to the parties, and, in cafes of inheritances, every claimant in a diftinct right had a feparate urn, but a fingle one ferved for all thofe who claimed under the fame title: the magiftrate then counted the pellets, and declared the judgement ; and here ended his si $\gamma s, 0 v^{\prime} \alpha, \alpha$, or prefidency of the court ; for he had no power to direct or influence the jury; and $I y /$ ias afks with fome warmth, What could be more difgraceful and abominable, than if the Archon, in caufes concerning beirefles, fould dare to folicit the judges, and defire them to find a verdict according to bis pleafure? This regulation deferves to be applauded, and would even be worthy of imitation, if the complex queftions and nice points, which an Engli/b jury are often required to determine, did not make it abfolutely neceffary for them to receive light and affiftance from the learning and experience of a judge.

If the complainant failed of fuccefs, he was amerced for his falfe claim, which amercement was ufually a fixth part of the fum demanded: in all cafes the unfuccefsful party forfeited his depofit, and the fines and forfeits were fpeedily collected by the rapias, or officers of the revenue, who paid them into the treafury, where fome of them were appropriated for the payment of the jurymen, and the reft applied to the fervice of the publick.

To the courts at Athens appeals lay from the decifions of the ftanding arbitrators, of whom there were four hundred and forty in different parts of Attica, forty-four being drawn by lot from each of the ten tribes : two of them commonly gave judgement in every caufe; and we find, in the fragment againft the burgeffes of Erchia, that their tribunal was fometimes placed in the Delphinian temple of Apollo. As very little occurs in the following fpeeches concerning this court, it is needlefs to difcourfe at large on its origin and conftitution ; but we may obferve, that its decrees muft always be diftinguifhed from the awards of arbitrators freely chofen by the parties themfelves, and generally fworn to do juftice, from which there was no appeat.

Before I conclude this prefatory pari of my work, it will be proper to mention fuccinctly, that the people of Athens, who had the freedom of the city and governed the republick, were divided into ten tribes; that the tribes comprifed a number of boroughs, difperfed in various parts of Attica; that each borough was fubdivided into wards, and each ward compofed of diftinct families. Every legitimate child, who was named on the tenth day after his birth, was prefented, before his feventh or eighth year, to the citizens of his ward with many ceremonies, to which we find allufions in the following fpeeches: the time for prefenting natural children was the feftival, called Apaturia, which lafted four days in January ; but adopted fons were admitted at the feafts of Thargelia in July, as we may collect from the fpeech on the eftate of Apollodorus, where the reader will fee a defcription of the forms ufual on thefe occafions. If the members of the ward were fatisfied of the child's legitimacy, and none of them removed from the altar the victim called xizp:ov, which was facrificed in their prefence and diftributed among the company, the name of the new citizen was infcribed on their common regifter ; but he was not a complete burgefs till the age of twenty years, when he was regiftered on the publick roll of his father's borough.

This will be a fufficient introduction to the works of the author, whom I now fend abroad in an Englifh drefs : the four orders of Athenian citizens, their military and religious inftitutions, their funeral rites, their celebrities in honour of Ceres and Proferpine, of Pallas and Prometheus, with their greater and lefs feftivals of Bacchus, are known to all, who have received the flighteft tincture of Grecian learning; but ISAUS will give full fatisfaction to thofe only, whofe imagination can for a time tranfport them to his country, who can live in idea two thoufand years ago, and read an Attick orator with the mind, and, as it were, the eyes of an Athenian; in the fame manner as an aftronomer, to borrow a comparifon from the excellent writer on Hebrew poetry, fuppofes himfelf to become for a while an inhabitant of every planet, where he obferves its peculiar qualities, and its fituation with refpect to others, meafures their diftances, compares their motions, and forms a diftinct view of the whole univerfe.

ATTICK LAWS.

I.

WHEN a woman, in order to enjoy the rights of a lawful wife, has been duly betrothed by her father, or her brother by the fame father, or her paternal grandfire, her children born in wedlock are legitimate. If none of thofe relations be living, and fhe be an heirefs, let her neareft kinfman marry her; but, if fhe have no kinfman entitiled to claim her, let him, who fhall be appointed her guardian, give her in marriage.

II.

The legitimate fons of heireffes fhall enter upon their eftates at the age of fixteen years, and fhall allow their mothers a fuitable maintenance.

III.

If the neareft kinfman of a woman without an eftate refufe to marry her, he fhall give her in marriage with a portion of five minas, if he belong to the firft order of citizens; or of three, if he belong to the fecond; or of a mina and a half, if he be of the third clafs. If fhe have many kinfmen in the fame degree, they fhall feverally contribute to her portion; and if there be many fuch women, each of their kinfmen fhall be obliged to marry or to give in marriage one of them only. If the next of kin will neither marry them nor give them in marriage, the Archon fhall compel them to do either one or the other; and, if he neglect this duty, he fhall forfeit ten minas to the Temple of Juno. Any citizen may prefer a complaint before the Archon againft fuch as difobey this law.

IV.

Let the Archon take care of orphans and heireffes, of defolate heritages, and of women, who, alledging that they are enceint, remain in the houfes of their deceafed hufbands: let him not fuffer them to be infulted or injurioufly treated. If any one fhould injure them, let him impofe a fine within the limits of his authority; and, if the offender fhould feem deferving of a heavier punifhment, let the Archon fummon him to appear within five days, and, laying the damages at fuch a fum as he thinks proper, let him bring him to a trial in the court of Heliæa, where, if he be found guilty, let the jury inflict fuch a corporal pain, or fet fuch a fine, as he fhall deferve.

V.

If a hufband repudiate his wife, he fhall return her portion, or pay intereft for it at the rate of nine obolus's a month for every mina. Her next of kin, under whofe protection the is, may fue for her portion or her alimony before the Archon in the Odeum.
VI.

All genuine unadopted citizens may devife their eftates as they think fit, provided that they have no legitimate children, and be not difabled by lunacy or age, or poifon or difeafe, nor influenced by women fo as to have loft their reafon from any of thefe caufes, nor be under any durefs or confinement.

VII.

The wills of fuch as have legitimate fons fhall fland good, if thofe fons die before their age of fixteen years.

VIII.

If a man have legitimate daughters, he may devife his eftate as he pleafes, on condition that the devifees take them in marriage.
IX.

Infants and women fhall not transfer or devife more than the value of a buthel of barley.
X.

Adopted fons fhall not devife the property acquired by adoption; but, if they leave legitimate fons, they may return to their natural family. If they do not return, the eftates fhall go to the heirs of the perfons who adopted them.
XI.

The adopted fon and the after born fons of the perfon who adopted him, fhall be coheirs of the eftate; but no adoption by a man, who has legitimate fons then born, fhall be valid.

XII.

If a citizen die inteftate and leave daughters, the neareft kinfmen who marry them fhall inherit the eftate; but, if he die childlefs, his brothers by the fame father fhall be his heirs, and the legitimate fons of thofe brothers fhall fucceed to the fhare of their fathers. If there be no brothers, the fifters on the father's fide, and their children, fhall inherit. On failure of fifters and nephews, the coufins on the father's fide fhall be heirs in the fame manner; but males and the children of males fhall be preferred, although in a remoter degree, provided that they belong to the fame branch. If there be no kinfman on the father's fide fo near as the fecond coufins, then let thofe on the mother's fide fucceed to the eftate in the fame order. Should there be no maternal kinfmen within the degree above limited, the next paternal kinfmen fhall be the heirs.

XIII.

No male or female baftard, born after the Archonfhip of Euclid, fhall fucceed either to facred or civil rights.

XIV.

Inheritances and heireffes may be claimed every month in the year except Auguft, and no devifee fhall poffefs an eftate except by an adjudication of the court.

XV.

If any man fhall controvert the title of another, to whom an inheritance or an heirefs has been adjudged, let him cite his adverfary before the Archon, as in other caufes. The demandant fhall depofit a ftated fum as a pledge of profecution, and, if there be no citation, the judgement fhall be reverfed. If the perfon, to whom the eftate was adjudged, be dead, his heir may be impleaded in the fame form, provided that the limited time be not expired. Let the fuit proceed before the Archon in the fame manner as the claim was at firft made by the poffeffor of the inheritance in difpute.
N OTE.

The Athenians made no difference between the tranfmiffion of real and perfonal property: in thefelaws, therefore, and in the following fpeeches, the words devife, heir, inkeritance, and the like, are applied both to lands and to goods, without being reftrained to the peculiar fenfe in which we ufe them.

SPEECHES OF ISÆUS.

SPEECH THE FIRST.

THE ARGUMENT.

POLYARCHUS left three sons, Cleonymus, Dinias, and the father of those, for whom Isæus composed the following speech. The third son dying, his children were committed to the guardianship of Dinias. These young men were heirs to Cleonymus by the laws of Athens, and their grandfather had appointed them successors to their uncle, if he should die childless. Cleonymus had, however, a power to dispose of his property; and, in a fit of anger against his brother Dinias, for some real or imagined wrong, had made a will in favour of two remoter kinsmen, Diocles and Posidippus ; which, according to the custom of the Athenians, he had deposited with one of the magistrates; but, after the death of Dinias, he took his nephews under his care, and determined to cancel the will, by which they were disinherited. Withs this intent he sent for the magistrate, who kept the testament, but died unexpectedly before an actual revocation of it. His nephews then entered upon his estate, as heirs at law ; and the other claimants produced the will; which, as Isæus contends in the person of his clients, was virtually revoked by Cleonymus.

SPEECH THE FIRST.

The Grandfons of Polyarcbus againft Pofidipóns and Diocles.

GREAT has been the change, which our fortunes have undergone by the deceafe of Cleonymus; who, when he was alive, intended to leave us his eftate, but has expofed us by his death to the danger of lofing it: and with fo modeft a referve, judges, were we bred under his care, that not even as hearers had we at any time entered a court of juftice, but now we come hither to defend our whole property ; for our adverfaries difpute our right not only to the poffeffions of the deceafed, but alfo to our paternal inheritance, of which they boldly affert that he was a creditor. Their own friends, indeed, and relations think it juft, that we fhould have an equal fhare even of thofe effects which Cleonymus confeffedly left them ; but our opponents themfelves have advanced to fuch a height of impudence, that they feek to deprive us even of our patrimony ; not ignorant, judges, of what is right and equitable, but conceiving us to be wholly defencelefs againft their attacks.

Confider then on what grounds the parties, who come before you, refpectively reft their claims: thefe men rely on a will, which our uncle, who imputed no blame to us, made in refentment againft one of our relations, but virtually cancelled before his death, having fent Pofidippus to the magiftrate, for the purpofe of folemnly revoking it; but we, who were his neareft kinfmen, and moft intimately connected with him, derive a clear title, both from the laws, which have eftablifhed our right of fucceffion, and from Cleonymus himfelf, whofe intention was founded on the friendhip fubfifting between us; not to urge, that his father, and our grandfather, Polyarchus, had appointed us to fucceed him, if he fhould die without children: fuch and fo juft being our claim, thefe affociates, who are nearly related to us, and who have no colour of juftice on their fide, are not afhamed of contefting our title to an eftate, about which it would be difgraceful for mere ftrangers to contend. Nor do we feem, judges, in this caufe to have the fame difpofitions towards each other; for I do not confider it as the greateft of my prefent misfortunes to be unjuftly difturbed with litigation, but to be attacked by thofe, whom it would be improper even to repel with any degree of violence; nor fhould I think it a lighter calamity to injure my relations in my own defence, than to be injured myfelf by their unprovoked affault: but they, judges, have different fentiments, and appear againft us with a formidable array of friends, whom they have fummoned, and advocates, whom they have retained; leaving behind them no part of their forces, as if they were going to inflict vengeance on open enemies, and not to wrong thofe whom they were bound by every natural and focial tie to affift. Their fhamelefs audacity and fordid avarice will be more clearly perceived by you, when you have heard the whole cafe, which I fhall begin to relate from that part, whence you will fooneft and moft eafily learn the fate of our controverfy.

Dinias, our father's brother, was our guardian, he being our elder uncle, and we, orphans; at which time, judges, a violent enmity fubfifted between him and Cleonymus: whether of the two had been the caufe of the diffenfion, it is not, perhaps, my bufinefs to determine; but fo far at leaft I may pronounce them both defervedly culpable, that, having till then been friends, and no juft pretext arifing for a breach of their friendfhip, they fo haftily became enemies on account of fome idle words. Now Cleonymus himfelf, when he recovered from that illneis, in which he made his will, declared, that he wrote it in anger ; not blaming us, but fearing, left at his death he fhould leave us under age, and left Dinias our guardian fhould have the management of our eftate; for he could not fupport the pain of thinking, that his property would be poffeffed during our infancy, and that facred rites would be performed at his fepulchre, by one, whom of all his relations he moft hated, while he lived : with thefe fentiments (whether laudable or not, I leave undecided), he made a difpofition of his fortune; and, when Dinias, immediately after, afked him publickly, whether we or our father had incurred his difpleafure, he anfwered, in the prefence of many citizens, that he charged us with no fault whatever, but made the will in refentment againft bim, and not from any other motive: how indeed, judges, could he have determined, if he preferved his fenfes, to injure us, who had given him no caufe of complaint?

But his fubfequent conduct will afford the ftrongeft proof, that by doing this he had no intention of wronging us; for, when Dinias was dead, and our affairs were in a diftreffed condition, he was fo far from neglecting us, or fuffering us to want neceffaries, that he bred us in his own houfe, whither he himfelf had conducted us, and faved our patrimony from unjuft creditors, who fought infidioufly to deprive us of it ; nor were our concerns lefs attentively managed by him than his own: from thefe acts, therefore, rather than from his written teftament, it is proper to collect his intention towards us ; and not to be biaffed by what he did through anger, by which all of us are liable to be hurried into faults, but to admit the clear evidence of thofe facts, which afterwards explained his defign. Still farther: in his laft hours he manifefted the affection, which he bore us ; for, being confined by the diforder of which he died, he was deffrous of revoking his will, and with that intent ordered Pofidippus to bring the officer who had the care of it ; which order he not only difobeyed, but even refufed admittance to one of the magiftrates, who came by chance to the door: Cleonymus, enraged at this, gave the fame command on the next day to Diocles ; but, though he feemed not dangeroufly ill, and we had great hopes of his recovery, he fuddenly expired that very night.

Firft then, I will prove by witneffes, that he made this will, not from any diflike to us, but from a fettled averfion to Dinias; next, that, when Dinias was no more, he fuperintended all our affairs, and gave us an education in his houfe, to which he had removed us; and thirdly, that he fent Pofidippus for the magiftrate, who was fo far from obeying the order, that, when one of the proper officers came to the door, he refufed to introduce him. Call thofe who will prove the truth of my affertion. witnesses. Call likewife thofe, who will fwear, that Cephifander and the other friends of our adverfaries were of opinion, that the whole eftate fhould be divided, and that we fhould have a third part of all, which Cleonymus poffeffed. witnesses.

Now it feems to me, judges, that all thofe who contend for the right of fucceffion to eftates, when, like us, they have fhown themfelves to be both neareft in blood to the perfon deceafed, and moft connected with him in friendfhip, may be excufed from adding a fuperfluity of other arguments: but fince men, who have neither of thofe claims, have the boldnefs to difpute with us for that which is legally ours, and to fet up a fictitious title, I am willing in a few words to give them an anfwer. They ground their pretenfions on this will, and admit that Cleonymus fent for the magiftrate ; not, fay they, with an intent to cancel it, but with a refolution to correct it, and to fecure the legacy more ftrongly in their favour: now confider, whether it be more probable, that our uncle fhould wifh to recall a will made in anger, at a time when he was moft intimate with us, or fhould meditate by what means he might be fureft to deprive us of his inheritance. Other men, indeed, ufually repent at length of the wrongs, which they have done their friends in their paffion ; but our opponents would convince you, that, when he fhowed the warmeft regard for us, he was moft defirous of eftablifhing the will, which, through refentment againft our guardian, he had made to our difadvantage : fo that, even fhould we confefs this idle fiction, and fhould you perfuade yourfelves to believe it, you muft fuppofe him to have been mad in the highef degree ; for what madnefs could be greater than to injure us, becaufe he had quarrelled with Dinias, and to make a difpofition of his property, by which he took no revenge on his enemy, but ruined his deareft friends, and afterwards, when we lived with him on terms of the ftricteft friendfhip, and he valued us above all men, to intend that his nephews alone (for fuch is their affertion) fhould have no fhare in his fortune? Could any man, judges, in his fenfes entertain fuch a thought concerning the diftribution of his eftate?

Thus from their own arguments they have made it eafy to decide the caufe againft themfelves; fince if he fent for the officer, as we contend, in order to cancel the will, they have not a fhadow of right ; and, if he was fo void of reafon, as to regard us leaft, who were moft VOL, VII.
nearly connected with him, both by nature and friendfhip, you would juftly decree, that his will was not valid. Confider farther, that the very men, who now pretend, that Cleonymus defigned to eftablifh their legacy, durlt not obey his order, but difmiffed the magiftrate, who came to the houfe; and thus, one of two moft oppofite things being likely to happen, either a ftronger confirmation of the intereft bequeathed to them, or a total lofs of all intereft in the fortune of the teftator, they gave a plain indication of what they expected, by refufing to admit the perfon who kept the will.

To conclude: fince this caufe has been brought before you, and fince you have power to determine the conteft, give your aid both to us and to him, who lies in the grave; and fuffer him not, I adjure you by all the gods, to be thus defpifed and infulted by thefe men; but, remembering the law, by which you are to judge, the oath, which you have folemnly taken, and the arguments, which have been ufed in the difpute, give a juft and pious judgement, conformably to the laws.

SPEECH THE SECOND.

THE ARGUMENT.

PYRRHUS left his estate to Endius, one of his sister's sons, whom he had adopted; and his nephew continued in possession of it above twenty years; but when, after his death, his mother claimed the inheritance as her brother's heiress, one Xenocles, who had married Phila, a natural daughter of Pyrrhus by the sister of Nicodemus, entered a protestation, that Pyrrhus had a legitimate daughter, and was consequently disabled from disposing of his estate to an adopted son. Xenocles lost the cause; but, Nicodemus having sworn at the trial, that he had betrothed his sister to Pyrrhus as a lawful wife, and that Phila was born after their nuptials, the brother of Endius prosecutes Nicodemus for wilful perjury, insisting that Phila was illegitimate, and actually given in marriage to Xenocles as the bastard of Pyrrhus.

SPEECH THE SECOND.

The Brotker of Endius againgt Nicodemus.

PYRRHUS, my maternal uncle, judges, having no legitimate children, adopted my brother Endius, who fucceeded to his fortune, and continued in poffeffion of it above twenty years; in which long interval not a fingle man ever pretended to controvert his title, or to difpute the validity of his adoption : but, laft year, on the death of my brother, this Phila, who had fuffered him to enjoy the eftate without interruption, afferted, that fhe was the legitimate daughter of my uncle; and her hufband Xenocles the Cyprian entered a claim in her right to the effects of Pyrrhus, who had fo long been dead, alledging in his bill of complaint, that he died poffeffed of three talents ; and, when my mother infifted on the fuperiority of our claim, he had the confidence to proteft, that fhe had no title to the eftate, becaufe Pyrrhus, to whom it originally belonged, had left a daughter born in wedlock: we traverfed this proteftation; and, having brought before the court the perfon who ventured to make it, we clearly convicted him of having fworn falfely, and prove his confederate Nicodemus to be the moft impudent of men in fupporting the other's teftimony, and daring to affert upon oath, before the fame judges, that he had betrothed his own fifter to my uncle, and that fhe became his lawful wife. Now that this man's evidence at the former trial was falfe, the conviction of Xenocles undeniably demonftrates; for, if Nicodemus had not then been thought perjured, it is clear, that his affociate would have fucceeded in his proteftation; that the legitimacy of this woman would have been eftablifhed ; and that fhe, not my mother, would have been declared my uncle's heirefs; but, fince the principal actor in the caufe was convicted of perjury, and the pretended daughter of Pyrrhus defifted from her claim, Nicodemus was at the fame time neceffarily found guilty of giving falfe evidence; for he fwore to the truth of the fame propofition, and they were both examined to the fame point, namely, whether the woman, in whofe right Xenocles claimed, was my uncle's daughter by a wife or by a harlot: this was the fingle iffue between us, as you will perceive by hearing our crofs-depofitions, the evidence of Nicodemus, and the proteftation, which was over-ruled. Take and read them to the court. Cross-DEpositions. evidence. protestation.

That the man, whom I now accufe, was immediately thought guilty of perjury, was apparent to all who attended the trial; but it will be proper that his guilt be proved before you alfo, judges, who are affembled to decide the fame queftion.

I defire firft to afk this witnefs himfelf, what fortune he gave with his fifter to a man worth three talents; whether this betrothed wife left her hufband, whilft he was alive, or departed from his houfe after his death; from whom he received his fifter's portion, when Pyrrhus was dead, to whom he has fworn that he had given her in marriage ; or, if it was not reftored to him, what action he thought proper to inftitute, for her maintenance or her fortune, againft one, who has been twenty years in poffeffion of the inheritance; or whether, in fo long a period, he once demanded the portion from the heir in any man's prefence? On the following points 100 I fhould be glad to interrogate him; why nothing of what I have juft mentioned has been done for a widow, who, as he fwore, was lawfully married; and, whether fhe had been betrothed to any other man, either of thofe, who were formerly connected with her, before fhe knew my uncle, or of thofe whom the admitted to her favours, while fhe lived with him, or of thofe, who have been intimate with her fince his deceafe? for it is notorious, that her brother gave her on the fame terms to many others, who kept her as a miftrefs, and whom, if it were neceffary to enumerate, it would give me no fmall trouble: fome of them I will mention, if you command me; but, if it be as unpleafant to you to hear fuch tales, as it is difagreeable to me to relate them, I will be contented with producing the very evidence given at the former trial, no part of which they have ventured to contradict; yet, when they admit (as they have in fact admitted, by not attempting to impeach the teftimony of our witneffes) that this woman was a common harlot, how can it be conceived, that fhe was legally betrothed to Pyrrhus? You will be convinced, when you have heard the depofitions, both that Nicodemus has fworn what was apparently falfe, and that the judges gave a proper and legal fentence, when they decreed, that the fucceffion could not belong to the daughter of a woman not lawfully married. Read the depofitions, and let the water-glafs be ftopped. DEPOSItions. That the mother of this Phila was common to all who chofe to be connected with her, and was not the betrothed wife of my uncle, as Nicodemus had the boldnefs to fwear, has been proved to you by the other kinfmen and neighbours of Pyrrhus, who tell you of the quarrels, riotous feafts, and continual diforders on her account, while fhe lived with him ; but no man prefumes to revel at the houfes of married women, who never accompany even their hufbands to publick entertainments, nor think it confiftent with decency to fit at table with ftrangers, efpecially with the firft who prefent themfelves ; yet they have not attempted to invalidate this evidence: now to fhow that I repeat it fairly, read once more the depofitions of the neighbours, together with thofe of the other witneffes concerning her numerous train of lovers, which will fatisfy the court, that fhe was a common proftitute, and never was the mother of a legitimate child. Depositions.

From all this evidence, which you will carry in your memory, it is apparent, that the fifter of Nicodemus, whom he fwore that he gave in marriage to my uncle, might have been any man's miftrefs, but was never betrothed to any, nor ever fupported the character of a matron: let us now confider the circumftances, from which it may be thought poffible, that Pyrrhus really married fo abandoned a woman, if we can fuppofe him capable of fuch indifcretion (for it fometimes happens indeed, that young men, inflamed with the love of a harlot, and actuated by intemperate paffion, are induced by their folly to ruin themfelves by fuch a marriage); and how can thefe circumftances be more clearly known, than by recollecting the teftimony of their own witneffes in the original caufe, and by examining the probability of the whole tranfaction? Reflect a moment on the impudence of their affertion: this Nicodemus, when he was going, as he fays, to betroth his own fifter into a family worth three talents, pretends that he carried with him, on fuch an occafion, one witnefs only, named Pyretides, whofe depofition they produced at the trial of the caufe; a depofition, which Pyretides himfelf difclaimed; and he fill denies, that he gave any fuch evidence, or knows any thing of the matter. In confirmation of this, I will mention a convincing argument, that the depofition produced by them was forged ; for you all know, that when we are going to do any publick and deliberate act, which mult be witneffed, we take with us our neareft relations and moft intimate friends, in order to have the benefit of their atteftation; but in private acts, which are often done on a fudden, we are contented with fuch witneffes, as happen to be near at hand; and, when afterwards their evidence becomes neceffary, we muft call thofe, whoever they are, that were prefent at the time of the act; but when we procure the teftimony of a witnefs, whom ficknefs prevents from giving it publickly, or of one who is going abroad, we defire the prefence of the mof reputable citizens, and of thofe whom we beft know, not of one or of two, but of as many as we can affemble, to preclude the deponent at any future time from the power of denying his depofition, and to give his evidence more weight with you, judges, by confirming it with the atteftation of many honeft men : thus, when Xenocles went to Thebes, with an intention to eject our fervants from the mines, which had been left us, he thought it not fufficient to call any perfons, who happened to be there, as witneffes of that oufter, but he carried with him Diophantus of Sphettus, who was his advocate in the original caufe, and Dorotheus of Eleufis, together with his brother Philochares, and many others, whom he had collected at Athens, and who travelled for that purpofe full three hundred furlongs ; yet, when he was going, as he fays, to take a depofition in this very city concerning the marriage of his wife's mother, on which her legitimacy depended, he called together none of his friends, but only Dionyfius of Erchia and Ariftolochus of 帅thalia, in the prefence of whom it is afferted that the depofition was taken in the heart of Athens. Such are the pretences of thefe impoftors, none of which can find credit with any difcerning man! The act, which they fay Pyretides attefted, was frivolous, to be fure, and of a tri-fing nature ; fo that their negligence in this affair was not fingular. How ! was not that act to have determined the very point, on which Xenocles was tried for perjury, whether his wife was the daughter of Pyrrhus, by a married woman, or by a harlot? Would he not, if fuch a marriage had really been contracted, have affembled all his friends for the purpofe of attefting it? Moft affuredly he would, if their ftory had not been a fiction; but Xenocles omitted this neceffary precaution, and took only two perfons, whom he accidentally met, to be prefent at a depofition of fuch importance; and this Nicodemus himfelf pretends, that when he gave his fifter in marriage to a man of fo confiderable a fortune, he carried with him no witnefs but Pyretides, who abfolutely denies the fact. Lyfimenes, indeed, afferts that he was invited to the marriage, together with his brothers, Chæron and Pylades; and thefe three were the uncles of the man, who was going to form fo debafing an alliance: but you will confider, whether this be credible; for, to reafon from probabilities, I fhould imagine, that Pyrrhus would rather have kept the tranfaction fecret from all his relations, if he meditated a contract fo difgraceful to his family, than have called his own uncles to be witneffes of their difgrace. This alfo fills me with furprize, that there was no agreement concerning a portion either on the one fide or on the other; for, if Nicodemus gave his fifter a fortune, it is to be fuppofed, that thofe, who pretend to have been prefent, would have recollected the fum given; or, if our uncle was fo enflaved by his paffions, as to marry a common proflitute, her brother would have been fill more folicitous to procure evidence of his giving money with her, and would have affembled a number of witneffes, that Pyrrhus might not have it in his power to difcard her, when he pleafed; for none of you are ignorant, that the inclinations of men impelled by their defires are very changeable ; yet this fellow fwears, that he gave his fifter in marriage to fo rich a man before one witnefs only on his part, and without any acknowledgement of a portion; and the uncles affert, that they were prefent, when their nephew agreed to marry this harlot without a fortune.

Thefe very uncles too have fworn that they were invited by Pyrrhus to an entertainment, which he gave on the tenth day after the birth of his daughter: and here I cannot fupprefs the vehemence of my indignation, when I fee, that Xenocles, who claims the patrimony of his wife, has called her in his bill of complaint by the name of Phila, while the uncles of Pyrrhus, who fwear that they were prefent on the tenth day, have declared, that her father gave her the name of her grandmother Clitareta. It is aftonifhing, that a man, who has now been married above eight years, fhould not know the true name of his own wife; that he could not have learned it before from his own witneffes; that neither his wife's mother, nor her uncle Nicodemus, fhould in fo long a period have informed him of it ; but that, inftead of her grandmother's name (if that name was in fact given her by Pyrrhus) he fhould infert the name of Phila in the very bill, by which he demands her paternal inheritance. What could be his motive? Could a hufband mean to deprive his wife of her grandmother's name, which her father gave, and which might be urged as a proof of her legitimacy? Is it not apparent, judges, that thefe pretended tranfactions, which, as they fwear, happened fo long ago, were invented by our adverfaries long fince the beginning of this fuit? They manifefly were: for it is not poffible, that thefe men, who fay they were invited on the tenth day after the birth of this girl, the daughter of Pyrrhus and niece of Nicodemus, fhould remember fo accurately from that day, whenever it was, to this, and fhould fwear in court fo pofitively, that her father named her Clitareta, yet that her neareft relations, her father himfelf, her uncle, and her mother, fhould not know the name of their own child: they muft have known and ufed it, if the fact had been true; but of this I fhall again have occafion to fpeak.

As to the teftimony of Nicodemus, it is eafy to perceive from the laws themfelves, that he was apparently guilty of perjury; for, fince, when a man gives a female relation in marriage with a fum of money by way of free gift and not as a portion, for which an equivalent muft be fettled, he cannot legally require that money to be given back, if either the wife fhould leave the hufband, or the hufband difmifs the wife, whoever afferts that he has betrothed his own fifter without a fecurity for her portion, muft neceffarily appear a moft daring impoftor: for what would fuch an alliance avail him, if the man to whom he was allied might repudiate his wife, whenever he chofe, without inconvenience? Yet fuch would have been her condition, jndges, had there been no ftipulation concerning her fortune. Would Nicodemus have engaged his fifter to our uncle upon thefe precarious terms, efpecially when he knew that fhe had never borne a child in fo long a courfe of proftitution, and that the ftipulated portion would by law return to him, if fhe fhould die childlefs? Can any of you, judges, believe, that Nicodemus is fo negligent of lucre, as to let nip one of thefe advantages? I cannot think it probable: And is this the man, whofe fifter our uncle chofe to marry? A man, who in an action brought againft him as an intruder by one of the ward, of which he pretended to be a member, obtained indeed a fentence in his favour, but was adjudged a freeman of the city by a majority of four votes only? Read this depofition, in proof of what I have alledged. Deposition. Yet this very man, who was perfectly well apprized of the law, by which he would have been entitled to his fifter's fortune, had fhe died without children, has ventured to fwear, that he gave her in marriage to our uncle, without agreeing with him for her portion. Read the laws, to which I allude. the laws. Can you, I fay again, believe that Nicodemus, if there had been any fuch marriage, would have been fo ftupidly neglectful of his intereft, as not to provide for his own advantage with a fcrupulous attention? No, by heaven, it feems impoffible, for even thofe, who give women to others, as their miftreffes, with a fum of money, take care previoufly to bargain for the benefits, which thofe women are afterwards to enjoy: and was Nicodemus contented with the ceremony of betrothing his fifter according to the forms of law, without beftowing a thought upon any thing elfe? Nicodemus, who, for the paltry fees, which he hopes to fcrape together for fpeaking fometimes before you, makes no fcruple of acting with fhamelefs difhonefty? His infamous conduct, indeed, moft of you well know, without being reminded of it; and I am defirous of proceeding to another argument, which will demonfrate the abominable impudence of his affertions. Tell me, Nicodemus, how came it, that if you really gave your fifter in marriage to Pyrrhus, and if you knew that fhe had left a legitimate daughter, you neverthelefs permitted our brother Endius to claim and obtain the inheritance, without regarding our uncle's daughter, who was born, as you alledge, in lawful wedlock? Could you be ignorant, that, by his allowed claim of the fucceffion, your niece was baftardized? For, whenever an adopted fon fets up a title to an eftate and obtains a decree in his favour, he proves the daughter of the deceafed to have been illegitimate ; as her father Pyrrhus, indeed, had done long before, by adopting my brother as his own fon; for no man, who has daughters lawfully begotten, can either devife his eftate from them, or aliene any part of it to their difadvantage: this you will clearly underftand, judges, when the laws themfelves have been read to you. the laws. Does it feem probable then, that, if Nicodemus did betroth his fifter, as he has moft confidently fworn, he would have fuffered my brother Endius to claim the inheritance, without fetting up the adverfe title of his own niece, and without entering a proteftation, that Endius had no right to her patrimony? Now that our brother not only claimed this eftate, but had his claim judicially allowed, and that without oppofition, this piece of evidence will convince you. Defosition. When, therefore, Endius inflituted a fuit for his inheritance, Nicodemus neither durft difpute his title, nor thought proper to proteft, that Pyrrhus left a legitimate daughter, who was his niece: he will invent, I fuppofe, fome filly pretext for this conduct, and will pretend either that he was unapprized of our proceeding, or that our allegations are falfe; but the firft is impoffible, and the fecond we have difproved: let us proceed to another topick.

When our brother gave your niece in marriage to Xenocles, would you, Nicodemus, have fuffered a girl, whom Pyrrhus lawfully begot, to be given away as the daughter of his miftrefs? Would you not have informed the Archon, that fhe, being an heirefs, was grofsly injured by an adopted fon, and deprived of her paternal eftate? efpecially as thefe informations alone may be made without danger to the informant, fince any man, who pleafes, may fue on behalf of an heirefs, and the complainants in fuch caufes are never amerced, even though the court unanimoufly decide againft them ; nor are they obliged, like other fuitors, to depofit money as a pledge of fupporting their complaint; but the profecutors may proceed without inconvenience, while the defendants, if they are convicted, feldom fail to fuffer an exemplary punifhment. If then, judges, the niece of Nicodemus had been really legitimate, would he patiently have feen her difpofed of in fuch a manner, and not have informed the magiftrate that an heirefs was thus infulted by a man, who had given her away as a baftard? No: if that, which you have now fo audacioufly fworn, had been true, you would inftantly have taken your revenge of Endius, who had injured your niece; unlefs you pretend, that you were ignorant of this fact alfo. What! did not you perceive from the very portion which Xenocles took with her, that fhe was rejected as illegitimate? This alone fhould have excited your refentment, and induced you to lay an information againft Endius, for claiming (as he did juftly claim) an inheritance of three talents, and for giving a legitimate daughter of the deceafed in marriage to a ftranger, with no greater portion than ten minas.-Would not this have raifed his indignation? Would he not have complained to the magiftrate? He would moft certainly, had the marriage been true: nor can I perfuade myfelf, that either Endius, or any other adopted fon, would have been fo abfurdly regardlefs of the laws, as to give a legitimate daughter of his father in marriage to another, inftead of marrying her himfelf; for he could not but perfectly know, that the children of fuch a daughter would inherit their grandfather's eftate; and would any man apprized of this law give his property away to another, efpecially fo large a fortune as thefe confederates have claimed? Can any of you imagine, that an adopted fon would be fo outrageoufly daring, as to betroth fuch a daughter, without giving her fo much as the tenth part of her own patrimony? Can you imagine, that, when this affair was in agitation, her uncle, who has fworn that he gave her to Pyrrhus, would have indured fuch an infult? I cannot believe it-no: he would have contended for the fucceffion; he would have entered a proteftation; he would have informed the Archon; and would have followed any courfe that might effectually have fecured the right of his niece. Yet, I repeat it, when my brother difpofed of this girl as of a baftard, Nicodemus, who calls her his niece, neither thought fit to affert her claim to the fortune of Pyrrhus, nor to exhibit an information againft the man, who had thus vilified her, nor was he at all indignant at the pitiful portion, which her hufband received; but fhamefully acquiefced in all thefe tranfactions.

On each of the points juft mentioned the laws are explicit ; but read firft the depofition concerning the claim and adjudication of the inheritance, and afterwards that concerning the pretended marriage. depositions. Next read the law. the law. To clofe the whole, read once more the depofition of the defendant. deposition of nicodemus. Now in what manner can an accufer more clearly convict the perfon accufed, than by adducing proofs both from the man's own conduct, and from the laws of his country? Of Nicodemus, therefore, almoft enough has been faid.

Confider now, whether the very man, who married his niece, may not afford a convincing argument of his guilt. It has been given in evidence, that Xenocles took the girl as an illegitimate daughter of Pyrrhus, and he himfelf eftablifhed the truth of that evidence, by his long acquiefcence; for, had he taken her from Endius as one born in lawful matrimony, he would not have neglected, when fo many of his children by her were adult, to affert againft my brother her claim to her paternal inheritance ; efpecially, when he was prepared to deny that Endius had really been adopted by Pyrrhus, and excepted to all the witneffes, who fwore that they were prefent at the execution of the will ; as their depofition, which fhall now be read, will convince you. deposition. By the actions, indeed, of thefe confederates, they manifefly acknowledged the validity of that adoption; for, had they thought it impeachable, they would not have fubmitted to the long poffeffion of the laft occupier, nor have delayed till now the claim of this woman to the fortune of Pyrrhus, who has been dead above twenty years, whereas Endius died only laft year in the month of October, and they put in their claim on the third day after his death : now the law ordains, that whoever has a title to an eftate muft claim it within five years after the deceafe of the laft poffeffor ; fo that Phila had only this alternative, either to contend with Endius, while he lived, for her paternal eftate, or, after the death of the adopted fon, to claim the fortune of her brother by right of fucceffion ; efpecially if Endius, as thefe men alledge, betrothed her to Xenocles, as his legitimate fifter; for we all perfectly know, that it is neceffary to make a formal claim to a fraternal inheritance, but that, when a man leaves children lawfully begotten, they immediately enter upon their patrimony and enjoy it without litigation. Thus you and all other citizens poffefs your paternal fortunes without fear of controverfy ; yet thefe affociates are bold enough to infift, that an adopted fon ought not to claim the fortune, which his father left him, while they are claiming the patrimony of Phila, whom they pretend to be the legitimate daughter of Pyrrhus: the very reverfe of which is the practice eftablifhed by law ; for, as I before obferved, legitimate children ought not to demand a decree for their paternal inheritance, but fons adopted by will are bound to fue for an adjudication of the eftate devifed to them; becaufe no man would controvert the right of an heir by defcent, whereas all the relations of the deceafed would eagerly engage in a conteft with an heir by appointment. Left any franger, therefore, who pleafed, fhould commence a fuit for fuch eftates, and left others fhould dare to claim them as vacant inheritances, all heirs by adoption are obliged to have their title formally allowed: none of you then can fuppofe, that Xenocles, if he really believed his wife to be legitimate, would have claimed her patrimony in court; but the would have entered, as lawful heirefs, on the lands of her father; and, if any one had ufed violence or attempted forcibly to retain the poffeffion, fhe would have ejected him, as fhe might, from her paternal eftate ; nor would her opponent have been expofed to a private lawfuit only, but even to a publick information before the Archon, who might have inflicted a corporal punifhment, or impofed a heavy fine. I may add, that thefe uncles of Pyrrhus, if they had known that their nephew left a legitimate daughter, and that neither Endius nor any of us would marry her, would never have permitted Xenocles, who bore no relation to the deceafed, to take a woman, who belonged to them as her next of kin : that would have been inconceivably ftrange. The law commands, that both fuch daughters as have been given in marriage to ftrangers by their own fathers (yet who can determine better than a father, what may be for his daughter's advantage ?) and fuch as remain fingle, fhall be married to their neareft relations, if their fathers die without leaving fons begotten in wedlock; and many men have had their wives taken from them by force of this law : would any one of Pyrrhus's uncles then have fuffered Xenocles to marry a daughter of their nephew, when the laws had adjudged her to one of them, and thus have made a ftranger heir to fo large an eftate, inftead of themfelves? Never believe it, judges; for no man prefers another's intereft to his own; but if they fhould pretend, that the adoption of Endius prevented the woman from having the quality of an heirefs, on which account they did not demand her in marriage for one of themfelves, let them firft be afked, why, if they allow that Endius was adopted, they took exceptions to all the witneffes who attefted his adoption, and why they paffed him over, who was laft poffeffor of the lands, and now illegally and informally have claimed the eftate for Phila as heirefs to the deceafed? Afk them alfo (and oppofe thefe interrogatories to their impudence) whether any legitimate child ever thinks it proper to obtain a fentence of the court for his own patrimony? That this girl, however, was truly an heirefs and liable to be married to her neareft kinfman, if fhe was not illegitimate, moft evidently appears from the law, which exprefsly ordains, that every man may difpofe of his eftate by will, as he pleafes, unlefs he has legitimate fons; and that, if he has daughters, he may bequeath his property, but the legatees are bound to take them in marriage; fo that a man is allowed to devife his poffeffions together with his legitimate daughters, but without them he can neither conftitute an heir by adoption, nor appoint a fucceffor by will to any part of his eftate: if Pyrrhus, therefore, adopted Endius without providing for his marriage with his daughter, fuch an adoption was illegal and confequently void ; but if he gave her together with his fortune to his adopted fon, how eame it that you, the uncles of Pyrrhus, permitted Endius, without taking her, if fhe was lawfully begotten, to procure a decree for eftablifhing his own title to the fucceffion? efpecially if your nephew, as you gave in evidence, had requefted you to fuperintend the interefts of the girl? This too, honeft men, you will fay, efcaped your memory: yet, when fhe was betrothed and given away by Endius, you, her father's uncles, fuffered the daughter of your nephew to be thus treated as his baftard; you, who fwear that you were prefent, when Pyrrhus took her mother as his lawful wife, and that you were invited by him to an entertainment on the tenth day after the child's birth. Thus, when your nephew had enjoined you (for this is the worft part of your conduct) to confult the girl's intereft, your mode of confulting it was to let her be difpofed of as bafe born, though fhe bore the name, as yourfelves have fworn, of your own fifter. From all this, as well as from the reafon of the thing, it is manifeft, that thefe confederates are the moft impudent of mortals; for with what view could my uncle, if he had a legitimate daughter, adopt my brother as his fon ? Had he any nearer kinfmen than we, whom he meaned to exclude from the right of demanding his daughter in marriage? But there neither exifted nor exifts (for he had no fons) any nearer relation to him than ourfelves; fince he had no brothers, nor brother's fons, and we are the children of his fifter. They will urge, that, had Pyrrhus chofen to adopt any of his other kinfmen, he would have given his daughter, together with his eftate; yet why fhould he thus openly and unneceffarily affront any one of his relations? It was in his power, if he had really married the fifter of Nicodemus, to introduce his daughter by her to the men of his own ward, as born in wedlock; by which care he might have made her fole heirefs of all his fortune, and might have directed, that one of her fons fhould be adopted as his own; for he well knew, that, by leaving her his heirefs, either one of us, his nephews, might have procured a decree for taking her in marriage, or, in cafe of our refufal, one of thefe ready witneffes, his uncles, might have married her ; or, had they too declined the match, his next neareft relation might have taken her, by a fentence of the court, with all his property; this he would have effected by introducing her as his daughter to the ward, of which he was a member, and by not adopting my brother; but by the adoption of Endius, and the want of admitting Phila as his daughter, he not only declared her, as he ought to do, illegitimate, and deprived her of all right to the fucceffion, but actually appointed my brother heir to the whole eftate.

Now, to convince you, that our uncle neither gave a nuptial feaft, nor thought proper to admit the girl, whom they call his legitimate daughter, to his ward, according to the ancient cuftom, the teftimony of thofe, who belong to the fame ward, fhall be read to you-Read: and do you fop the water-glafs. deposition. Read now the proofs of my brother's adoption. evidence. Can you then give credit to the teftimony of Nicodemus, in preference to the fuperior evidence of my uncle's own conduct? Will any man endeavour to perfuade you, that Pyrrhus really married a common harlot? You will not be perfuaded, unlefs Nicodemus inform you, as I faid in the beginning of my fpeech, with what portion he betrothed his fifter to Pyrrhus; before what magiftrate fhe declared, that fhe had left her hufband or his houfe ; by whom her fortune was returned to him, after the death of my uncle ; or, if he could not obtain a reftitution of it in the courfe of twenty years, what action he brought for her alimony or for her portion againft the occupier of the eftate: let him alfo declare, whether he had betrothed her to any one elfe, either before or after her pretended marriage with Pyrrhus, or whether fhe had children by any other man.

Interrogate him to thefe points, and do not forget to examine him concerning the marriagefeaft fuppofed to be given to the members of his ward: this is no light argument againft the teftimony of Nicodemus; for, could they have prevailed with him to marry the woman, he might furely have been induced to give an entertainment to the men of his ward, and to prefent this girl to them as his legitimate child, who, if he had been really married, was heirefs to a fortune of three talents. He would have been obliged alfo to entertain the wives of his companions at the feftival of Ceres, and to have borne fuch offices in his borough on account of his wife, as are required from a man of his poffeffions : yet nothing of this kind will appear to have been done. The members of his ward have given their evidence: I fhall, therefore, conclude with the teftimony of his fellow-burgeffes. Depositions.

SPEECH THE THIRD.

THE ARGUMENT.

NICOSTRATUS dying in a foreign country, Hagnon and Hagnotheus, his first cousins, contend for the right of succession to his estate against Chariades, who claims under a will. This speech is by some supposed to have been delivered by Isæus in his own person as next friend to the young men, whose cause he supported; but Reiske well observes, that no argument in favour of this opinion can be drawn conclusively from the opening of the speech; since the words my intimate friends might have been used by any other speaker.

SPEECH THE THIRD。

Hatgnon and Hagnotbeus againft Cbariades.

SINCE Hagnorr and Hagnotheus; judges, are my intimate friends, and their father long ago was clofely connected with me, it will become me to defend them with the beft of my abilities: now as neither of them has ever been out of Attica, it will not be poffible for them to come prepared with evidence of tranfactions in foreign parts, nor eafy to confute their opponents, if they fhould tell a fictitious ftory; but what has paffed in our own country will, in tmy opinion, afford a fufficient proof, that all they, who claim the fortune of Nicoftratus as legatees, aim only at deluding and infulting you.

Firft then, judges, it will be proper for you to confider the difference of the names in our refpective bills of complaint, and to determine which claim has been made more naturally and with more fimplicity ; for Hagnon and Hagno* theus have alledged in their bill that Nicoftratus was the fon of Thrafymachus, and declare that they are his coufins, both which allegations they prove by witneffes; but Chariades and his coadjutors in this caufe affert, that one Smicrus was the father of Nicoftratus, yet claim thofe effects which belonged to the fon of Thrafymachus; and, though my clients neither pretend to know the name of Smicrus, nor are related to any perfon, but maintain that Thrafymachus was the father of their coufin, yet to this eftate alfo thefe affociates have fet up a title. If each party agreed in the name, nothing more would be left for your decifion, than fingly, whether that Nicoftratus, whom both fides have in contemplation, made a will or not; but how can the fame man be faid in the fame caufe to have two fathers? To this abfurdity has Chariades reduced himfelf; for having claimed a right of fucceffion to Nicoftratus the fon of Smicrus, he has inftituted his fuit againft thofe, who claim as next of kin to the fon of Thrafymachus, and has tendered an iffue, that the fon of both thefe men was one and the fame Nicoftratus. Now all this is a mere trick and a preconcerted fcheme; for they are well aware, that while the cafe remains fimple and not involved in this perplexity, my friends will have no difficulty in proving, that Nicoftratus never made a will; but, if they introduce the name of a different father, and contend, neverthelefs, for the fame eftate, they are perfectly fenfible, that we muft ufe a longer argument to prove, that Nicoftratu's was the fon of Thrafymachus, than to convince your, that no will was made by him: befides, had they confeffed, that Nicoftratus was his fon, they could not have denied, that thefe young men were coufins to the deceafed; but by fabricating a new father to him, they have drawn into queftion not his will only, but his pedigree.

This contrivance, and not this alone, but all that has happened from the beginning, will convince you, that other perfons, befides thofe who appear in the caufe, have brought this trouble on my clients; for, when the fucceffion to a fortune of two talents had been fix times litigated, who did not fhave his head? Who did not put on mourning cloaths? As if by a falfe fhow of forrow they were fure of fucceeding to the eftate. How many fictitious kinfmen and felf-adopted fons laid claim to the goods of Nicoftratus? Firft, one Demofthenes pretended to be his nephew; but, when he was confuted by the true heirs, he withdrew his demand. Telephus next afferted, that the deceafed had made a gift to him of all his property; but he too was very foon reduced to filence: then came Amyniades, bringing to the chief magiftrate a child not three years old, as the fon of Nicoftratus, who for eleven years together had been abfent from Athens. Next, Pyrrhus of Lampra was abfurd enough to alledge, that the deceafed had confecrated his whole fortune to Minerva, and yet had given the fame fortune to him. Laftly, Cranaus and Ctefias of Befa began with afferting, that they had obtained judgment for one talent in a fuit againft Nicoftratus; and, when they failed in their proof, had the impudence to declare that he had been their freedman. Thefe were the men, who firft bed their forces againft the poffeffions of Nicoftratus : Chariades was then at reft; but afterwards he both fet up a title for himfelf, and even produced his own child by a harlot, as the fon of the deceafed, hoping either to be mafter of the eftate, or to procure for his baftard the freedom of the city; till perceiving, that he fhould be unable to prove him legitimate, he difcontinued the claim of the infant, and has put in iffue his own right under a will.

It were much to be wifhed, judges, that every claimant of an eftate by gift or teftament, who fails in proving his title, fhould not pay the ordinary cofts of the fuit, but be amerced for the publick benefit to the full amount of the fortune which he falfely claimed; for then, neither would the laws be defpifed, nor families infulted by thefe impoftors, nor fictions invented about the dead: but, fince all ftrangers who pleafe may at no great expence difpute the right of fucceffion to any eftate whatever, it behoves you to weigh the pretenfions of fuch men with a fcrupulous exactnefs, and to let no exertion of your faculties be wanting in fuch a caufe. To me, indeed, it feems that in fuits concerning wills, and in them only, greater ftrefs fhould be laid on circumftantial proof than on the pofitive affertion of witneffes; for, when other inftruments are litigated, it is not always difficult to prove a witnefs perjured, when he fwears in the lifetime and even in the prefence, as it often happens, of the fuppofed party to the deed; but when the validity of a will is in difpute, how can it be known that falfe evidence is given, unlefs there be palpable contradictions in it, when the teftator is no more, his family are uninformed of the tranfaction, and the mode of proof is by no means clear or convincing? Let me add, judges, that the generality of teftators fay nothing to the witneffes concerning what they have bequeathed, but call them only to atteft the fimple execution of the will: now it frequently happens, that the inftrument is altered, and a forged will fubftituted for the real one; while the witneffes are ignorant whether that produced in the fuit be the fame with that which they attefted. Since then even they, who were confeffedly prefent, are liable to be deceived, how much more readily will they attempt to impofe upon you, who know nothing of what paffed? But the law, judges, intends, that a will fhall be valid, not merely if it be executed, but if the teftator be of found memory: you muft firf, therefore, confider, whether a will was made at all, and next whether the maker of it had his fenfes at the time ; now, fince we deny, that any fuch inftrument exifted, how can you enquire concerning the fanity of the teftator, before you are convinced that he made his teftament? Obferve therefore the difficulty of difcovering, whether the claimants under a will have truth on their fide: but, as to thofe who claim by right of fucceffion, in the firft place no witneffes need be called to fubftantiate that right, fince all agree, that the poffeffions of the dead regularly devolve to their next of kin : befides, not only the laws concerning confanguinity, but alfo thofe concerning the alienation of eftates, are favourable to kinfmen; for they fuffer no man to difpofe of his effects, who has loft his reafon either from age or ficknefs, or any of thofe infirmities, which, as you know, are incident to nature; but the neareft relation of an inteftate, whatever might have been the ftate of his faculties, has an undifputed title to his property. Add to this, that you muft eftablifh wills on the credit of witneffes, by whom you are liable to be deceived (for if none were to fwear falfely, there would be no profecutions for perjury), whillt in the other cafe you confide in none but yourfelves; for the neareft relations fucceed to eftates by laws, which yourfelves have enacted.

To all this likewife we may add, that, if thofe who now claim under the will had been undeniably friends to Nicoftratus, even that would not be conclufive in their favour; but there would then have been a probable ground for fuppofing the teftament to be genuine; fince perfons, who have no affection for their kinfmen, have fometimes preferred to their neareft relations by blood thofe who were related to them only by friendfhip: but now we have fully evinced, that thefe claimants were neither friends nor companions of the fuppofed teftator, nor even of the fame ftation with him in the army abroad.

Confider too another fact, which moft clearly proves the impudence of Chariades; for muft he not be fhamefully impudent, who neither carried out the body, nor collected the bones, after it was burned, of one who had left him a large eftate; but fuffered all this to be done by perfons wholly unconnected with him; and who, though he performed none of thefe holy rites enjoined by the laws, has the boldnefs to claim the poffeffion's of the deceafed; and, though he neglected his duty, has not omitted even to lay hands on the goods of Nicoftratus? Nor will he himfelf deny the greateft part of thefe charges: he will invent, no doubt, fome fine pretences and weighty reafons for his conduct ; but, what juft excufe remains for a man, who plainly avows his offence?

By this time, judges, you muft be perfectly fenfible, that thefe men have no legal right to the fortune of Nicoftratus, but wifh to baffle you, and to deprive his near relations of that fucceffion, which the laws have given them: nor has Chariades alone acted thus, but many other falfe claimants have arifen; and, indeed, when a man dies in a foreign country, numbers often claim his fortune, who were ftrangers even to his perfon; for they think that, if they fucceed, they fhall enjoy the property of others, and fhall not, if they fail of fuccefs, incur a confiderable lofs. In thefe cafes enow may be found, who will forfwear themfelves, and fuch evidence is in its nature very obfcure; in a word, there is a vaft difference between the claims of the legatee and the heir of the deceafed: you will firft, therefore, enquire, judges, whether a will actually exifts ; for of this both law and juftice require you to be certain; and now, fince you have no perfonal knowledge of the tranfaction, and fince the witneffes to the pretended will were not friends to Nicoftratus, but ftrongly in the intereft of Chariades, who demands what he has no right to claim, what can be more juft than to give the goods of a coufin to his coufins, whofe effects, had he furvived them, would have come to him, as their kinfmen in the fame degree?

Our adverfaries will perhaps affert, that Hagnon and Hagnotheus are not the coufins of Nicoftratus, fince the affociates are labouring to fupport a man who claims as legatee. Why do they not rather lay claim to the eftate themfelves, as of kin to the deceafed? Are they fo filly as to relinquifh fuch poffeffions for the fake of eftablifhing a will, when by their own account it will be more advantageous for them, that the fortune of Nicoftratus fhould be decreed to my clients than to Chariades? If my friends, who claim as kinfmen, take poffeffion of the eftate, it will at any future time be competent to the fupporters of our antagonift to prove, that they are more nearly related to Nicoftratus, and that he was the fon of Smicrus, not of Thrafymachus; but, fhould Chariades gain his caufe, no relation will ever be permitted to difturb him ; for what can the kindred of a man alledge againft him who claimed under a will, and for whom judgment has been given?

were the caufe your own, let that be your determination in the cafe of thefe youths: they have produced witneffes before you, who have proved, firft, that they are the coufins of Ni coftratus, as children of his father's brother; and that no difagreement ever fubfifted between them; next, that they fupplied the charges of his funeral; that Chariades had no intimacy with him either here or in the army, and that the connection, on which he relies, is wholly fictitious. Independently too of thefe proofs, it will be right for you, judges, to confider and weigh the qualities of the refpective claimants. Thrafippus, the father of Hagnon and Hagnotheus, had often ferved your public offices, contributed to your expences, and been in all refpects a virtuous citizen; nor have his fons themfelves ever departed from their country except by your command ; nor, while they ftayed at home, have they been ufelefs to the city; but they exert themfelves in their military fation, bring their contributions with alacrity, difcharge every other part of their duty with faithfulnefs, and fet an example, as all Athens knows, of decency and moderation; fo that they were far worthier than Chariades to receive benefit from a will of Nicoftratus; for that fellow, foon after he came hither, was convicted of larceny, having been caught in the yery act, and committed by the magiftrates to prifon (whence he was afterwards releafed) together with fome other felons, whom you publickly fentenced to an ignominious death : afterwards being accufed, before the council, of fraudulent practices, he made default, and, having fled from juftice, was abfent from this city feventeen years, and continued abroad till the death of Nicoftratus; nor has he at any time fought in your defence, or contributed to your fupplies, unlefs perhaps he has given a trifle fince the commencement of this fuit ; but no other expence has he at any time fuftained for your advantage. With this difpofition, with this character, is he not contented with eluding the punifhment due to his crimes, but muft he add to them fo audacious a claim of what belongs to others? Were my clients, indeed, malevolent and bufy informers, or like too many of their fellow-citizens, he would not, I imagine, be now contending for the property of Nicoftratus, but would be trembling at the confequences of a criminal profecution. Let fome other perfon, judges, draw the publick vengeance on his head: be it your care to protect thefe injured young men; and favour not thofe, who bafely grafp at the poffeffions of others, before the neareft relations, and, let me add, in fome meafure, the benefactors of the deceafed ; but, calling to mind both the laws and your oaths, and reflecting on the evidence which we have laid before you, pronounce a fentence confiftent with juftice and truth.

SPEECH THE FOURTH.

ON THE ESTATE OF DICEOGENES.

THE ARGUMENT.

DICÆOGENES, whose estate is in dispute, had four sisters, all of whom were married and had issue. When he died without children, his uncle Proxenus produced a will, by which the deceased appeared to have left his cousin Dicaogenes, one of the defendants, a third part of his effects, and the legacy was accordingly delivered; but the cousin, not satisfied with a share, insisted that he had a right to the whole; and, having set up another will in his favour, obtained a decree by surprize, and took the remaining two thirds from the sisters of the deceased. Afterwards the sons of those sisters, being prepared with their evidence, disputed the validity of the second will, and proved it to have been forged; upon which Dicrogenes undertook to restore the two thirds without diminution, and one Leochares was his surety: but on their refusal to perform their promise, the nephews of the elder Dicæogenes commenced a suit against the principal and the surety for a specifick performance of their agreement.

SPEECH THE FOURTF.

Mencxenus and Otbers againft Dicaogenes and Leocbares.

WE had imagined, judges, that all agreements made in court concerning this difpute would have been fpecifically performed; for, when Dicæogenes difclaimed the remaining two thirds of this eftate, and was bound, together with his furety, to reftore them without any controverfy, on the faith of this affurance we gave a releafe of our demands : but now, fince he refufes to perform his engagement, we bring our complaint, conformably to the oath which we have taken, both againft him and his furety Leochares. the oath. That we fwore truly, both Cephifodotus, who ftands near me, perfectly knows, and the evidence, which we fhall adduce, will clearly demonftrate. Read the depofitions. evidence.

You have heard the teftimony of thefe witneffes; and I am perfuaded; that even Leochares himfelf will not venture to affert that they are perjured ; but he will have recourfe perhaps to this defence, that Dicrogenes has fully performed his agreement, and that his own office of furety is completely fatisfied: if he alledge this, he will fpeak untruly, and will eafily be confuted ; for the clerk fhall read to you a fchedule of all the effects, which Dicæogenes, the fon of Menexenus, left behind him, together with an inventory of thofe which the defendant unjuftly took; and, if he affirms, that our uncle neither had them in his life-time, nor left them to us at his death, let him prove his affertion; or, if he infifts, that the goods were indeed ours, but that we had them reftored to us, let him call a fingle witnefs to that fact; as we have produced evidence on our part, that Dicæogenes promifed to give us back the two thirds of what the fon of Menexenus poffeffed, and that Leochares undertook to fee him perform his promife. This is the ground of our action, and this we have fworn to be true. Let the oath again be read. THE OATH.

Now, judges, if the defendants intended only to clear themfelves of this charge, what has already been faid would be fufficient to enfure my fuccefs; but, fince they are prepared to enter once more into the merits of the queftion concerning the inheritance, I am defirous to inform you on our fide of all the tranfactions in our family; that, being apprized of the truth, and not deluded by their artifices, you may give a fentence agreeable to reafon and juftice.

Menexenus our grandfather had one fon named Dicrogenes, and four daughters, of whom Polyaratus my father married one ; another was taken by Democles of Phrearrhi, a third by Cephifophon of Prania; and the fourth was efpoufed by Theopompus the father of Cephifodotus. Our uncle Dicæogenes, having failed to Cnidos in the Parhalian galley, was flain in a fea fight ; and, as he left no children, Proxenus the defendant's father brought a will to our parents, in which his fon was adopted by the deceafed, and appointed heir to a third part of his fortune; this part our parents, unable at that time to conteft the validity of the will, permitted him to take; and each of the daughters of Menexenus, as we fhall prove by the teftimony of perfons then prefent, had a decree for her fhare of the refidue. When they had thus divided the inheritance, and had bound themfelves by oath to acquiefce in the divifion, each perfon poffeffed his allotment for twelve years; in which time, though the courts were frequently open for the adminiftration of juftice, not one of thefe men thought of alledging any unfairnefs in the tranfaction; until, when the ftate was afflicted with troubles and feditions, this Dicæogenes was perfuaded by Melas the Egyptian, to whom he ufed to fubmir on other occafions, to demand from us all our uncle's fortune, and to affert that he was appointed heir to the whole. When he began his litigation, we thought he was deprived of his fenfes; never imagining that the fame man, who at one time claimed as heir to a third part, and at another time as heir to the whole, could gain any credit before this tribunal ; but when we came into court, although we urged more arguments than our adverfary, and fooke with juftice on our fide, yet we loft our caufe; not through any fault of the jury, but through the villainy of Melas and his affociates, who, taking advantage of the publick diforders, affumed a power of feizing poffeffions, to which they had no right, by fwearing falfely for each other: by fuch men therefore were the jury deceived ; and we, overcome by this abominable iniquity, were fripped of our effects; for my father died not long after the trial, and before he could profecute, as he intended, the perjured witneffes of his antagonift. On the very day, when Dicæogenes had thus infamoufly prevailed againft us, he ejected the daughter of Cephifophon, the niece of him who left the eftate, from the portion allotted to her; took from the wife of Democles what her brother had given her as coheirefs ; and deprived both the mother of Cephifodotus and the unfortunate youth himfelf of their whole fortune : of all thefe he was at the fame time guardian and fpoiler, next of kin, and cruelleft enemy; nor did the relation, which he bore them, excite in the leaft degree his compaffion; but the unhappy orphans, deferted and indigent, became deftitute even of daily neceffaries. Such was the guardianfhip of Dicæogenes their neareft kinfman! who gave to their avowed foes what their father Theopompus had left them, illegally poffeffed himfelf of the property which they had from their maternal uncle and their grandfather; and (what was the moft open act of cruelty) having purchafed the houfe of their father and demolifhed it, he dug up the ground on which it ftood, and made that handfome garden for his own houfe in the City. Still further; although he receives an annual rent of eighty minas from the eftate of our uncle, yet fuch are his infolence and profligacy, that he fent my coufin Cephifodotus to Corinth as a fervile attendant on his brother Harmodius; and adds to his other injuries this cruel reproach, that he wears ragged clothes and coarfe bufkins: but is not this unjuft, fince it was his own violence which reduced the boy to poverty?

On this point enough has been faid: I now return to the narration from which I have thus digreffed. Menexenus then, the fon of Cephifophon, and coufin both to this young man and to me, having a claim to an equal portion of the inheritance, began a profecution againft thofe who had perjured themfelves in the former caufe, and convicted Lycon, whom he firft brought to juftice, of having falfely fworn that our uncle appointed this Dicæogenes heir to his whole eftate: when, therefore, this pretended heir was difappointed in his hopes of deluding you, he perfuaded Menexenus, who was acting both for our intereft and his own, to make a compromife, which, though I blufh to tell it, his bafenefs compells me to difclofe. What was their agreement? That Menexenus fhould receive a competent fhare of the effects on condition of his betraying us, and of releafing the other falfe witneffes, whom he had not yet convicted: thus, injured by our enemies and by our friends, we remained with filent indignation ; but you fhall hear the whole tranfaction from the mouth of witneffes. evidence. Nor did Menexenus lofe the reward of his perfidy; for, when he had difmiffed the perfons accufed, and given up our caufe, he could not recover the promifed bribe from his feducer, whofe deceit he fo highly refented, that he came over again to our fide. We therefore, juftly thinking that Dicæogenes had no right to any part of the inheritance, fince his principal witnefs had been actually convicted of perjury, claimed the whole eftate as next of kin to the deceafed: nor will it be difficult to prove the juftice of our claim; for, fince two wills had been produced, one of an ancient date, and the other more recent; fince by the firt, which Proxenus brought with him, our uncle made the defendant heir to a third part of his fortune, which will Dicæogenes himfelf prevailed upon the jury to fet afide; and fince the fecond, under which he claims the whole, had been proved invalid by the conviction of the perjured witneffes, who fwore to its validity: fince, I fay, both wills had been fhown to be forged, and no other teftament exifted, it was impoffible for any man to claim the property as heir by appointment, but the fifters of the deceafed, whofe daughters we married, were entitled to it as heirs by birth.

Thefe reafons induced us to fue for the whole as next of kin, and each of us claimed a fhare ; but when we were on the point of taking the ufual oaths on both fides, this Leochares put in a proteftation, that the inheritance was not controvertible : to this proteftation we took exceptions, and having begun to profecute Leochares for perjury, we difcontinued the former caufe. After we had appeared in court, and urged the fame arguments on which we have now infilted, and after Leochares had been very loquacious in making his defence, the judges were of opinion that he was perjured ; and as foon as this appeared by the number of pellets, which were taken out of the urns, it is needlefs to inform you what entreaties he ufed both to the court and to us, or what an advantage we might then have taken : but attend to the agreement which we made. Upon our confenting that the Archon fhould mix the pellets together without counting them, Dicæogenes undertook to furrender two thirds of the inheritance, and to refign them without any difpute to the fifters of the deceafed; and for the full performance of this undertaking, Leochares was his furety, together with Mnefiptolemus the Plotian ; all which my witneffes will prove. evidence. Although we had been thus injured by Leochares, and had it in our power, after he was convicted of perjury, to mark him with infamy, yet we confented that judgement fhould not be given, and were willing to drop the profecution upon condition of recovering our inheritance : but after all this mildnefs and forbearance, we were deceived, judges, by thefe faithlefs men; for neither has Dicæogenes reftored to us the two thirds of his eftate, conformably to his agreement in court; nor will Leochares confefs that he was bound for the performance of that agreement. Now, if thefe promifes had not been made before five hundred jurymen and a croud of hearers, one cannot tell how far this denial might have availed him; but, to fhow how falfely they fpeak, I will call fome witneffes who were prefent both when Dicæogenes difclaimed two thirds of the fucceffion, and undertook to reftore them undifputed to the filters of our uncle, and when Leochares engaged, that he fhould punctually perform what he had undertaken: to confirm his evidence, judges, we intreat you, if any of you were then in court, to recollect what paffed and, if our allegations are true, to give us the benefit of your teftimony; for, if Dicæogenes fpeaks the truth, what advantage did we reap from gaining the caufe, or what inconvenience did he fuftain by lofing it? If, as he afferts, he only difclaimed the two thirds, without agreeing to reftore them unencumbered, what has he loft by relinquifhing his prefent claim to an eftate, the value of which he has received? For he was not in poffeffion of the two third parts, even before we fucceeded in our fuit, but had either fold or mortgaged them ; it was his duty, however, to return the money to the purchafers, and to give us back our fhare of the land; fince it was with a view to this, that we, not relying fingly upon his own engagement, infifted upon his finding a furety. Yet, except two fmall houfes without the walls of the city, and about fixty acres of land in the Plain, we have received no part of our inheritance; nor did we care to eject the purchafers of the reft, left we fhould involve ourfelves in litigation; for when, by the advice of Dicæogenes, and on his promife not to oppofe our title, we turned Micio out of a bath, which he had purchafed, he brought an action againft us and recovered forty minas. This lofs, judges, we incurred through the perfidy of Dicæogenes; for we, not imagining that he would recede from an engagement fo folemnly made, affured the court, that we would fuffer any evil, if Dicæogenes fhould warrant the bath to Micio; not that we depended on his own word, but we could not conceive, that he would betray the fureties, who had undertaken for him ; yet this very man, who difavowed all pretenfions to thefe two thirds, and even now admits his difavowal, had the bafenefs, when he was vouched by Micio, to acknowledge his warranty; whilf I, unhappy man, who had not recovered a particle of my fhare, was condemned to pay forty minas for having oufted a fair purchafer, and left the court oppreffed by the infults of this Dicæogenes. To prove the tranfaction, I fhall call my witneffes. evidence.

Thus have we been injured, judges, by this man; whilft Leochares, who was bound for him, and has been the caufe of all our misfortunes, is confident enough to deny what has been proved againf him; becaufe his undertaking was not entered in the regifter of the court: now, judges, as we were then in great hafte, we had time to enter part only of what had been agreed on, and took care to provide faithful witneffes of all the ret ; but thefe men have a convenient fubterfuge: what is advantageous to them, they allow to be valid, although it be not written, but deny the validity of what may be prejudicial to their interefts, unlefs it be in writing; nor am I furprifed, that they refufe to perform their verbal promifes, fince they will not even act conformably to their written agreements. That we fpeak truly, an undeniable proof fhall be produced: Dicæogenes gave my fifter in marriage with a portion of forty minas to Protarchides of Potamos; but, inftead of paying her fortune in money, he gave her hufband a houfe which belonged to him in Ceramicus; now fhe had the fame right with my mother to a fhare of this eftate ; when Dicæogenes, therefore, had refigned to the women two thirds of the inheritance, Leochares told Protarchides in what manner he had become a furety, and promifed in writing to give him his wife's allotment, if he would furrender to him the houfe which he had taken inftead of the portion: Protarchides, whofe evidence you fhall now hear, confented; but Leochares took poffeffion of his houfe, and never gave him any part of the allotment. Evidence.

As to the repairs of the bath, and the expenfes of building, Dicæogenes has already faid, and will probably fay again, that we have not reimburfed him, according to our engagement, for the fum which he expended on that account; for which reafon he cannot fatisfy his creditors, nor give us the fhares to which we are entitled. To anfwer this, I muft inform you, that, when we compelled him in open court to difclaim this part of the inheritance, we permitted him, by the advice of the jury, to retain the profits of the eftate, which he had enjoyed fo long, by way of compenfation, for his expenfes in repairs, and for his publick charges; and fome time after, not by compulfion, but of our own free will, we gave him a houfe in the city, which we feparated from our own eftate, and added to his third part. This he had as an additional recompenfe for the materials which he had bought for his building; and he fold the houfe to Philonicus for fifty minas: nor did we make him this prefent as a reward of his probity, but as a proof that our own relations, how difhoneft foever, are not undervalued by us for the fake of lucre; and even before, when it was in our power to take ample revenge of him by depriving him of all his poffeffions, we would not act with the rigour of juftice, but were contented with obtaining a decree for part of our own property; whilft he, when he had procured an unjuft advantage over us, plundered us with all poffible violence, and now ftrives to ruin us, as if we were not his kinfmen, but his inveterate foes.

We will now produce a ftriking inftance of our candour, and of his knavery. When, in the month of December, judges, the profecution againft Leochares was carried on with firmnefs, both he and Dicæogenes entreated me to poftpone the trial, and refer all matters in difpute to arbitration; to which propofal, as if we had fuftained only a flight injury, we confented ; and four arbitrators were chofen, two by us, and as many by them: we then fwore, in their prefence, that we would abide by their award ; and they told us, that they would fetthe our controverfy, if poffible, without being fworn; but that, if they found it impoffible to agree, they would feverally declare upon oath what they thought the merits of the cafe. After they had interrogated us for a long time, and enquired minutely into the whole tranfaction, Diotimus and Melanopus, the two arbitrators, whom we had brought, expreffed their readinefs to make their award, either upon oath or otherwife, according to their opinion of the truth from the teftimony of both parties; but the other two, whom Leochares had chofen, refufed to join in any award at all; though one of them, Diopithes, was a kinfman of Leochares, and an enemy to me on account of fome former difputes, and his companion Demaratus was a brother of that Mnefiptolemus, whom I mentioned before, as one of the fureties for Dicæogenes: thefe two declined giving any opinion, although they had obliged us to fwear that we would fubmit to their decifion. evidence.

It is abominable then, that Leochares fhould requeft you to pronounce a fentence in his favour, which his own relation Diopithes refufed to pronounce ; and how can you, judges, with propriety decree for this man, when even his friends have virtually decreed againft him? For all thefe reafons I intreat you, unlefs you think my requeft inconfiftent with juftice, to decide this caufe againft Leochares.

As for Dicæogenes, he deferves neither your compaffion as an indigent and unfortunate man, nor your indulgence as a benefactor in any degree to the ftate: I fhall convince you, judges, that neither of thefe characters belongs to him ; fhall prove him to be both a wealthy and a profligate citizen, and fhall produce inftances of his bafe conduct towards his friends, his kinfmen, and the publick. Firf, though he took from us an eftate, from which he annually received eighty minas, and though he enjoyed the profits of it for ten years, yet he is neither in poffeffion of the money, nor will declare in what manner he has employed it. It is alfo worthy of your confideration, that, when he prefided over the games of his tribe at the feaft of Bacchus, he obtained only the fourth prize, and was the laft of all in the theatrical exhibitions and the Pyrrhick dances: thefe were the only offices that he has ferved, and thefe too by compulfion ; and fee how liberally he behaved with fo large an income! Let me add, that, in a time of the greateft publick calamity, when fo many citizens furnifhed veffels of war, he would not equip a fingle galley at his own expenfe, nor even joined with another; whilft others, whofe entire fortune was not equal to his yearly rents, bore that expenfive office with alacrity: he ought to have remembered, that it was not his father who gave him his eftate; but you, judges, who eftablifhed it by your decree; fo that, even if he had not been a citizen, gratitude fhould have prompted him to confult the welfare of the city.

Again ; when contributions were continually brought by all who loved their country, to fupport the war and provide for the fafety of the ftate, nothing came from Dicæogenes: when Lechæum indeed was taken, and when he was preffed by others to contribute, he promifed publickly, that he would give three minas, a fum lefs than that which Cleonymus the Cretan voluntarily offered: yet even this promife he never performed; but his name was hung up on the ftatues of the Eponymi, with an infcription, afferting, to his eternal difhonour, that he had not paid the contribution, which he promifed in publick, for his country's fervice. Who now can wonder, judges, that he deceived me, a private individual, when he fo notorioufly deluded you all in your common affembly? Of this tranfaction you fhall now hear the proofs. evidence.

Such and fo fplendid have been the fervices which Dicæogenes, poffeffed of fo large a fortune, has performed for the city! You perceive, too, in what manner he conducts himfelf towards his relations; fome of whom he has deprived, as far as he was able, of their property; others he has bafely neglected, and forced, through the want of mere neceffaries, to enter into the fervice of fome foreign power. All Athens faw his mother fitting in the temple of Illithyia, and heard her accufe him of a crime, which I blufh to relate, but which he blufhed not to commit. As to his friends, he has now incurred the violent hatred of Melas the Egyptian, who had been fond of him from his early youth, by refufing to pay him a fum of money, which he had borrowed: his other companions he has either defrauded of fums, which they lent him, or has failed to perform his promife of giving them part of his plunder, if he fucceeded in his caufe.

Yet our anceftors, judges, who firft acquired this eftate, and left it to their defcendants, conducted all the publick games, contributed liberally towards the expenfe of the war, and continually had the command of gallies, which they equipped: of thefe noble acts the prefents, with which they were able, from what remained of their fortune after their neceffary charges, to decorate the temples, are no lefs undeniable proofs, than they are lafting monuments of their virtue; for they dedicated to Bacchus the tripods, which they won by their magnificence in their games; they gave new ornaments to the temple of the Pythian Apollo; and adorned the fhrine of the goddefs in the citadel, where they offered the firft fruits of their eftate, with a great number, if we confider that they were only pritate men, of ftatues both in brafs and ftone.

They died fighting refolutely in defence of their country; for Dicxogenes, the father of my grandfather Menexenus, perifhed in the battle of Eleufis, where he had a command; his fon Menexenus fell at the head of the Olyfian legion in Spartolus ; and his fon, my uncle, loft his life at Cnidos, where he commanded the Parhalian galley.

His eftate, O Dicæogenes, thou haft unjuftly feized, and fhamefully wafted ; and having converted it into money, haft the affurance to complain of poverty. How haft thou fpent that money? Not for the ufe of the ftate, or of your friends ; fince it is apparent, that no part of it has been employed for thofe purpofes; not in breeding fine horfes; for thou never wait in poffeffion of a horfe worth more than three minas: not in chariots; for, with fo many farms and fo great a fortune, thou never hadft a fingle carriage even drawn by mules: nor haft thou redeemed any citizen from captivity; nor haft thou conveyed to the citadel thofe fatues, which Menexenus had ordered to be made for the price of three talents, but was prevented by his death from confecrating in the temple; and, through thy avarice, they lie to this day in the fhop of the ftatuary: thus haft thou prefumed to claim an eftate, to which thou hadft no colour of right, and haft not reftored to the gods the fatues, which were truly their own. On what ground, Dicæogenes, canft thou afk the jury to give a fentence in thy favour ? Is it becaufe thou haft frequently ferved the publick offices; expended large fums of money to make the city more refpectable, and greatly benefited the ftate by contributing bountifully towards fupporting the war? Nothing of this fort can be alledged with truth. Is it becaufe thou art a valiant foldier? But thou never once couldit be perfuaded to ferve in fo violent and fo formidable a war, in which even the Olynthians and the iflanders lofe their lives with eagernefs, fince they fight for this country; while thou, who art a citizen, wouldft never take arms for the city.

Perhaps, the dignity of thy anceftors, who flew the tyrant, imboldens thee to triumph over us: as for them, indeed, I honour and applaud them, but cannot think that a fpark of their virtue animates thy bofom; for thou haft preferred the plunder of our inheritance to the glory of being their defcendant, and wouldft rather be called the fon of Dicrogenes than of Harmodius; not regarding the right of being entertained in the Prytaneum, nor fetting any value on the precedence and immunities which the pofterity of thofe heroes enjoy: yet it was not for noble birth, that Harmonius and Ariftogiton were fo tranfcendently honoured, but for their valour and probity ; of which thou, Dicrogenes, haft not the fmalleft fhare.

SPEECH THE FIFTH.

ON THE ESTATE OF PHILOCTEMON:

THE ARGUMENT.

PIILOCTEMON, one of Euctemon's sons, having adopted Chærestratus, the son of Phanostratus and his younger sister, deposited his will with Chæreas, his elder sister's husband, and died in the lifetime of his father. When he also was dead, Chærestratus claimed the inheritance according to law; and, when one Androcles protested that the estate could not be the subject of litigation, because Euctemon had left two legitimate sons, Antidorus and another, the friends of Chærestratus excepted to the protestation, averring that both Antidorus and his brother were illegitimate, and relying upon the law of Solon, which expressly declared, that bastards, whether male or female, should not inherit: the clients of Isæus, therefore, maintain the affirmative in two issues; in one, that Philoctemon adopted Chærestratus; in another, that Antidorus was a bastard.

SPEECH THE FIFTH.

Chareftratus againft Androcles.

'THAT I am intimately connected, judges, with Phanoftratus, and with Chæreftratus, who now appears before you, many of you, I believe, perfectly know: but thofe, who are unacquainted with our friendfhip, fhall hear how ftrong a proof I gave of it ; for, when Meneftratus failed to Sicily with the naval command, I, who had before been on a fimilar expedition, forefaw all the perils which enfued; yet, at the requeft of thefe dear friends, I was the companion both of their voyage and of their miffortunes: now I fhould act moft abfurdly, if I voluntarily expofed myfelf to fuch imminent danger, becaufe I was connected with them and valued that connection, but fhould now decline the tafk of fpeaking for them, that you may decide their caufe agreeably to your oaths, and that they may obtain complete juftice from your verdict. I intreat you therefore to indulge me with your favour, and to hear me with benevolence; for this is no trifling conteft, but a queftion of the higheft importance to the happinefs of my friends.

Philoctemon of Cephifia, the fon of Euctemon, had fo great a regard for Chæreftratus, that he adopted him by will and appointed him fucceffor to his eftate: when, therefore, Chæreftratus claimed his fucceffion in due form (at which time any Athenian had a right to fet up an adverfe claim in a direct courfe of law, and, if he could prove a better title, would have enjoyed the fortune) this Androcles, inftead of bringing a fair and regular action, entered a proteftation that the eftate was not liable to controverfy, intending to prevent my friend from fupporting his claim, and you from determining who is the rightful heir of Philoctemon: thus in a fingle caufe and by a fingle decree he hopes to obtrude upon the deceafed two fictitious brothers, who bear no relation to him; to poffefs the property himfelf without a competitor; to difpofe as he pleafes of Philoctemon's fifter ; and to deftroy the efficacy of his teftament.

Of the many audacious falfities, which proteftation of Androcles contains, that concerning the will fhall be firft confuted ; and I will prove not only that Philoctemon made a will, but that he appointed Chæreftratus to be his fon and fucceffor; for, as he had no children by his wife, as the war was carried on with violence, and as his frequent expeditions both by Iand and fea expofed him to continual danger, he refolved, left his inheritance fhould become defolate for want of an heir, to nominate one by his will: his two brothers had both died childlefs; and one of his fifters, who had been many years married to Chæreas, had borne him no male child ; but his other fifter, the wife of my friend Phanoftratus, had two fons, the elder of whom, Chæreftratus, he adopted as his own, and declared in his teftament, that, if his wife was not delivered of a fon, Chæreftratus fhould have his eftate. This will, which he depofited with his brother-in-law Chrreas, fhall now be read to you; and then attend to the witneffes who were prefent at the execution of it. THE wile. evidence.

You have heard the proof of his will, and have obferved how his eftate is given by it to my client: now to prove that he had a power of making fuch a teftamentary difpofition, the law itfelf fhall be produced, from which you will eafily perceive the juftice of the whole tranfaction. THELAW.

This law, judges, which equally binds us all, permits every man, who has no legitimate children, to difpofe by will of his property, unlefs his faculties be impaired by age, or by diforder, or by any of the infirmities which are fpecified in the law: now that Philoctemon had not one of thefe infirmities, I will in few words demonItrate ; for what man can have the hardinefs to impeach the underftanding of fo excellent a citizen, who, while he lived, received the higheft honours from you, was advanced to the moft important offices, and died in battle againft your enemies? That he made his will then in his perfect fenfes, as the law permitted him, you have heard clearly proved ; fo that on this head the falfe affertions of Androcles are apparent; but, as he has protefted alfo that Antidorus was the legitimate fon of Euctemon, this too I will fhow to be untrue.

Euctemon, judges, had no other fons than Philoctemon, Ergamenes, and Hegemon; he had alfo two daughters; and their mother was the daughter of Mixiades the Cephifian : thefe are known to all his acquaintance, to thofe of the fame ward, and to many of the fame borough, as they will prefently give in evidence; but, that he ever married another woman, of whom Antidorus was born, no man can pretend to know or ever to have heard in the lifetime of Euctemon. The relations of the family muft have known all that paffed, and we may fuppofe them to be the moft credible witneffes: call them, therefore, firft ; and then read the depofitions of others. Witnesses and depositions.

Yet further: I will convince you that our opponents themfelves have in fact given the fame evidence; for, at the examination before the Archon, when they depofited the fated fum, and contended that thefe young men were the legitimate fons of Euctemon, being afked by us, who was their mother, and whofe daughter fhe was, they were unable to inform us, though we protefted againit their allegation, and the Archon preffed them to anfwer, as the law required. Could they, indeed, be allowed, judges, to contend and proteft that the fons were legitimate, when they could not declare, who their mother was, nor mention any one of her relations? Then, to be fure, they delayed the fuit by pretending, that fhe was a Lemnian ; but, when they came afterwards to be re-examined, they faid, before any queftion was propofed, that the mother of the young men was Callippe, the daughter of Piftoxenus; thinking it fufficient to pronounce a name, which they had probably invented: when we afked who this Piftoxenus was, and whether he was living or not, they anfwered, that he died fighting in Sicily, and left his only daughter to the care of Euctemon, to whom, while he was her guardian as well as hufband, fhe bore thefe two fons. A moft audacious affertion, and palpable fiction! as I will prove to you by their very anfwers at the examination ; for two and fifty years have elapfed from the Archonfhip of Arimneftus, when our armament embarked for Sicily, and the elder of thefe youths, whom they pretend to be the fons of Euctemon and Callippe, has not paffed his twentieth year: if then we deduct his age from the time fince the Sicilian expedition, there remain above thirty years; fo that Callippe could neither be in ward at that age, nor could fhe have remained fo long unmarried and childlefs, but muft have had a hufband either by the authority of a guardian, or by an adjudication of the court. Befides, fhe muft have been known by the friends of Euctemon, and by his fervants, if fhe really was married to him and lived fo many years in his houfe; for it is not enough to produce mere names at an examination, but it is neceffary to fhow that the perfons actually exifted, and to prove their exiftence by the teftimony of thofe who were connected with them : yet when we challenged them to fummon any of Euctemon's friends, who knew that fuch a woman as Callippe lived with him or was his ward, and urged them to decide the controverfy by the evidence of fuch domefticks as were ftill alive, or to deliver up to us any of their flaves, who might be compelled to difclofe what they remembered of the tranfaction, they would neither give up their own flaves to be queftioned, nor take ours for that purpofe. Officer, read their anfwer, together with our depofitions and challenges. ANSWER. Depositions. challenges.

So decifive a mode of proof have they declined; but it fhall be my care to inform you, who this woman and her children are, and to defcribe to you thofe, who have declared them to be legitimate, and are ftriving to procure for them the inheritance of Euctemon. It may perhaps be unpleafant to Phanoftratus, to hear the misfortunes of his father-in-law opened to the court ; but it is expedient to fay a few words concerning them, that, when you are apprized of the truth, you may be more able to decide according to juftice.

Euctemon lived fix and ninety years, the greater part of which time he paffed with apparent profperity; for he had an affluent fortune, a wife and hopeful children, with other ingredients of happinefs; but in his advanced age he met with no fmall calamity, which threw his whole family into diforder, confumed a great part of his eftate, and occafioned a diffenfion between him and his mof intimate friends: what was the fource of this evil, and in what manner it happened, I will explain as concifely as I am able.

He had a freedwoman, who inhabited a houfe of his in the Pirrus, where fhe kept fe-

Feral female flaves, and among them one named Alce, whom, I fancy, moft of you know : after this Alce had been bought, the lived many years in that houfe, but, when fhe grew older, was removed from it. While fhe continued there, one Dio, a freedman, was connected with her, and by him, as fhe herfelf declared, fhe became the mother of thefe two young men, whom Dio educated as his own ; till, having committed a great mifdemeanor, and fearing a profecution, he ftole away to Sicyon : after which Euctemon gave Alce the care of his houfe in Ceramicus by the little gate, where they fell wine. When fhe was fent thither, judges, fhe was the occafion of many and great diforders ; for Euctemon, going frequently to collect his rents, paffed a confiderable part of his time in that houfe, and even fometimes fat at table with the woman, having left his wife and children in the houfe, which he ufually inhabited; and, though his family were highly difpleafed, yet he perfifted in his courfe, and fpent his whole time with Alce, having either by poifon, or by diforder, or by fome other infirmity, fo totally loft his underftanding, that he was perfuaded by her to offer the elder of her two boys to the men of his ward under his own name; but when Philoctemon oppofed his admiffion, and the members of the ward refufed to admit him, or to accept of the victim ufually given on fuch occafions, the old man, being enraged againft his fon, and defiring to diftrefs him, made a propofal of marriage to the fifter of Democrates the Aphidnean, with an intent to educate and adopt her children as his own, if Philoctemon would not confent to have the other admitted : upon which his relations, knowing that he could have no more children at his age, but that fuppofititious fons might be produced, which would raife fill more violent animofities, advifed Philoctemon, judges, to give his confent that his father fhould introduce the boy to the ward, as he defired, and allot a farm for his fupport. In this advice Philoctemon acquiefced, heartily afhamed of his father's dotage, but not knowing how elfe to fecure himfelf from the calamity which threatened him : when therefore an agreement was made to that effect, and the boy was admitted as a member of the ward, Euctemon dropped his project of marrying, by which he fhowed that his defign had not been formed with a view to having children of his own, but for the fake of admitting the baftard of his miftrefs; for what occafion, judges, had he to marry, if, as they infift, he had fons born in wedlock with a citizen of Athens? Who could have prevented his admitting them to their freedom? Why fhould he introduce them upon certain conditions, when the law had ordained, that all children, begotten in matrimony, fhould have an equal thare of their paternal fortune? Or why, laftly, did he admit into his ward the elder only of the boys, and pay no regard to the younger, whom from the day of his birth he had not mentioned either to Philoctemon whilft he was alive, or to any of his friends? Thefe are the men, Androcles, whom you have averred, in your proteftation, to be the legitimate fons of Euctemon. Now, to prove the truth of my affertions, let the depofitions be read. depositions.

After this tranfaction Philoctemon was flain at Chios in a naval engagement, in which he had the command of a galley ; and Euctemon declared in open court, that he was defirous of recording his agreement with his fon; at the fame time Phanoftratus, accompanied by his kinfman Chæreas, was on the point of failing with the fleet, which Timotheus conducted; and the veffel, which he commanded, was juft weighing anchor at Munichia, when Euctemon went thither attended by fome friends, and, having written a will declaratory of the conditions on which he adopted this Antidorus, he depofited the inftrument with his relation Pythodorus of Cephifia. Now, that he acted in this manner, not as if he had legitimate children, both Androcles has proved, and the fact itfelf fufficiently demonftrates; for no man bequeaths any thing as a legacy to his own fons, fince the law gives every fon the poffeffions of his father, and permits not any man, who has children begotten in wedlock, to difpofe of his eftate by will.

When the writing had lain almof two years with Pythodorus, and Chæreas in the mean time was dead, thefe affociates, being fubfervient to the inclinations of Alce, perceiving the property of Euctemon to be continually wafted, and concluding from his dotage, that a fair opportunity prefented itfelf, began their attack in concert ; and firft they prevailed with Euctemon to revoke his will, as difadvantageous to the boys; becaufe his daughters only and their children would inherit his vifible property, but, if he fold part of his land and left the fum which he received for it, the adopted fon and his friends would take firm poffeffion of the money. The old man, perfuaded by this reafoning, demanded his will of Pythodorus, and inftituted a fuit for the production of it : when Pythodorus, therefore, appeared before the Archon, Euctemon declared that he wifhed to cancel his will; and his kinfman affured both him, and Phanofratus who was prefent, that he did not oppofe his intention, but, as Chæreas, who had joined with Euctemon in depofiting the will, had left a daughter, he thought it proper to defer the revocation of it till fhe could give her confent, and have a hufband or guardian who might confirm her act: as the Archon was of the fame opinion, Euctemon, having made a declaration before the magiftrate and his affeffors, in the hearing of many witneffes whom he called, that his teftament was no longer valid, left the court.

Soon after this they proceeded to thofe acts, with a view to which they had perfuaded him to refcind his will: they fold the Athmonian eftate for feventy-five minas to Antiphanes; the Serangian bath to Ariftolochus for thirty; and the houfe in the city which had been mortgaged for four and forty minas, they conveyed to the hierophant: next they difpofed of his goats, together with the goatherd, for thirteen minas; and two carriages to be drawn by mules, one for eight minas, and the other for five and a half; not omitting any of the flaves, who worked for his benefit. The fum, which they collected from the fale of thefe effects very foon after the death of Philoctemon, amounted to more than three talents. I will now call witneffes, who will fwear to the truth of all my affertions, EYIDENCE.

I will now call witneffes, who will fwear to the truth of all my affertions, EYIDENCE.

Thus were thefe poffeffions aliened: the defluction of the reft they foon meditated, and contrived for that purpofe the moft infamous artifice, to which you fhould particularly attend; for, perceiving that Euctemon was entirely fuperannuated, and could not even rife from his bed, they deliberated how they might after his death effectually fecure his property to themfelves. What was the refult of this deliberation? They announced the two boys to the Archon as having been adopted by the two deceafed fons of Euctemon; and, feigning themfelves to be their guardians, petitioned the magiftrate that the lands and houfes of thofe orphans might be expofed to auction, fo that fome part of their eftate might be let, and fome of it pledged as a fecurity for the rents; that the latter might be diftinguifhed by columns and infcriptions, and that they themfelves, while Euctemon was alive, might receive the profits. As foon therefore as the courts were full, the magiftrate caufed the auction to be proclaimed, and a party of thefe confipirators began to bid for the lots; when fome, who were prefent, ran to inform our friends of the contrivance, and they, coming without delay, apprized the judges of the whole tranfaction: upon this the court would not fuffer the houfes to be let;
but, if the fcheme had not been detected, the whole eftate would have been lof. Call thofe who were witneffes of this affair. evidence.

Before thefe men were connected with this artful woman, and, in conjunction with her, confpired againft Euctemon, he poffeffed fo large an eftate, that both he and his fon Philoctemon filled the moft expenfive offices for your fervice, and were fo far from aliening their ancient poffeffions, that they were continually making new purchafes with the money, which they had faved; but, when Philoctemon died, fuch was the diforder which prevailed, that not half of his former eftate remained, and the rents were all extinguifhed. Nor were they fatisfied, judges, with confuming this property; but, as foon as Euctemon was dead, and his body was lying in the houfe, they were audacious enough to detain the fervants with them, that his death might not be mentioned to his daughters, or to his widow, or to any of his relations; while they, together with Alce, removed all the money and furniture to the next houfe, which had been rented, and was then inhabited, by one of their crew, this very Antidorus; nor, when the widow and daughters heard of Euctemon's death from others, and came to the door, would they fuffer them to enter ; but infifted, that it was not their bufinefs to bury the deceafed. Thus were they prevented from going in till juft before fun-fet ; and when they entered, they found the body, which had lain, as the fervants declared, unburied for two days, and perceived that all the goods had been removed by thefe confederates. The women, therefore, employed themfelves, as their duty required, in preparing the corfe for burial, while my clients were fhowing to fome friends, who accompanied them, the miferable condition of the houfe; and afked the fervants, in the prefence of the affociates, to what place the effects had been carried: when they anfwered, that Androcles and the reft had conveyed them to the houfe next adjoining. Phanoftratus and his companions thought it neceffary to make a legal enquiry into the robbery, and demanded the flaves, who had carried the goods, to be delivered up to them; but the contrivers of the mifchief would not confent to this act of juftice. In confirmation of my narrative, read thefe depofitions, and this inventory of the goods which were removed. DEPOSITIONS. inventory. Thus having conveyed fo many valuable effects from the houfe, having received the money arifing from the fale of fo large an eftate, and having divided among themfelves the rents which became due in fo long an interval, they imagine that they fhall be mafters of the whole ; and to fuch a height of confidence have they advanced, though they durft not meet us in a direct form of action, that they have averred the legitimacy of our two opponents by way of proteftation; not confidering, that they fpeak both falfely and inconfiftently with their previous conduct ; fince, when they appeared before the Archon, they ftyled one of them the adopted fon of Philoctemon, and the other of Ergamenes, whereas they now proteft them both to be the fons of Euctemon: yet had they been lawfully begotten, and had they been adopted, as they firft alledged, not even then could they have been called the fons of Euctemon; for the law forbids a fon by adoption to return into the family, from which he was emancipated, unlefs he leave a legitimate fon of his own in the family which adopted him ; fo that, even from their own behaviour, it is manifeft that their evidence is falfe. If they had then completed their fcheme of letting the houfes, my clients would now be precluded from afferting their right; but, as the judges declared that it was not their bufinefs to let them, thefe men have not ventured to difpute our title in a regular courfe of law, but have protefled, with exceffive audacity, that the very perfons whofe claim you rejected were lawful heirs to the eftate. Obferve too the affurance of Andro-cles, who firft claimed for himfelf the daughter of Euctemon, as if fhe had been the heirefs, and infifted on his right to a fifth part of the property, as if it had been liable to litigation, yet has now averred that Euctemon left a legitimate fon. Has he not by this clearly convicted himfelf of having given falfe evidence? He certainly has ; for had a fon of Euctemon begotten in wedlock been living, his daughter could not have been heirefs, nor could the eftate have been open to controverfy: to prove that he firft made fuch a claim, thefe depofitions fhall be read to you. Evidence.

The very reverfe, therefore, has now happened of that which the law ordains; for it is enacted, that, from the Archonfhip of Euclid, no male or female baftard fhall have any right of confanguinity either in civil or facred matters : but Androcles and Antidorus think themfelves entitled to ftrip the daughters of Euctemon and their fons of their inheritance, and to feize the poffeffions both of him and of Philoctemon; while this woman, who impaired Euctemon's underftanding, and has poffeffed herfelf of fo valt a fum, has infolence enough, through their perfuafion, not only to undervalue her late mafter's friends, but even to treat the whole city with contempt. A fingle circumftance, which you fhall hear, will eafily convince you of her lawlefs impudence ; but firft let the law be read. The LAW.

This ordinance, judges, have you fo pioufly and folemnly made, thinking it of high importance to the ftate, that Ceres and Proferpine, as well as all the other deities, fhould be adored with reverence ; but the mother of my adverfaries, who was confeffedly a flave, whofe whole life had been marked with infamy, and who confequently ought neither to have entered the temple, nor to have feen any thing that it contained, had the boldnefs, when divine rites were performed to thefe goddeffes, to accompany the proceffion, to walk into the temple, and to infpect what it was unlawful for her to fee: the decree of the fenate concerning her proves, the truth of my allegations. the decree.

You muft then confider, judges, whether a fon of this woman fhould fucceed to the eftate of Philoctemon, and perform holy ceremonies at his tomb, or the fon of his own fifter, whom he had himfelf adopted; and whether the fifter of Philoctemon, who was married to Chæreas, and is now a widow, fhould be at their difpofal, either to be given in marriage to any man, whom they chufe, or to grow old in a ftate of widowhood, or whether fhe ought not, as a legitimate daughter, to be difpofed of by yourfelves as your wifdom fhall direct: on this point muft your judgment now be given, for to this dangerous crifis are my clients reduced by the proteftation. Should thefe confederates fail of fuccefs in the prefent conteft, and fhould the eftate be declared open to controverfy, they may again bring the queftion before you in another action : yet, if a will was made by Philoctemon, which he had no power to make, his power ought now to have been difputed; but, if he undeniably had fuch a right, and the fact only of his having devifed his property be denied, they fhould not have oppofed our claim by this collateral mode of litigation, but hould have brought the matter in due form to a regular iffue. At prefent, what clearer method can be found of proving this man's teftimony to be falfe, than by interrogating him thus? Whence, Androcles, do you know, that Philoctemon neither made a will nor adopted Chæreftratus ? For it is reafonable, judges, that a man fhould give evidence of thofe tranfactions of which he was eye witnefs, or he may on fome occafions even repeat what he has heard from others. You have exprefsly averred, that Philoctemon never made a will and died childlefs ; but how is it poffible, judges, for this to be known by him? It is the fame, as if he were to aver, that he knows what all of you are doing every dayThis at leaft, audacious as he is, he will not affert, that he was perpetually in Philoctemon's company, and knew every action of his life; for of all men living, the deceafed abhorred him moft, both for his general improbity, and tecaufe he alone of all his relations confpired with Alce to embezzle the goods of Euctemon, and acted in concert with her in the manner before defcribed.

Above all it muft neceffarily move our indig* nation, that they fhould fo impudently abufe the name of Euctemon, the grandfather of Chærertratus; for if, as they alledge, Philoctemon had no power to appoint an heir, and if the eftate was Euctemon's, is it not more juft that his poffeffions fhould be inherited by his daughters, who were indifputably legitimate, and by us, who are their fons, than by men, who bear no relation to him, and who are confuted not only by our arguments, but alfo by the conduct of thefe provident guardians? This, judges, I fupplicate and adjure you particularly to remember, as I before related it ; and as you have it in evidence: that Androcles firft declared himfelf their guardian, as if they were the legitimate fons of Euctemon, and then claimed for his own ule the property of their fuppofed father: now, in the name of the immortal gods, is it not abominable, judges, that, if thefe men be legitimate, their guardian fhould claim for himfelf both their fortune and the daughter of the deceafed Euctemon, as if the was the object of a judicial conteft, and that, if they are illegitimate, he fhould now make an averment of their legitimacy? Thefe are plain contradictions: fo that the falfity of his teftimony has been proved not only by witneffes, but alfo by his own behaviour.

As to Chæreftratus, no man gives him affiftance by protefting that the eftate is not open to litigation; but he defires to proceed in the regular courfe; while this fellow prevents all others from afferting their claims, and, having averred that Euctemon left children begotten in matrimony, imagines that you are to be deluded with impertinent digreffions, believing that, if he wholly omits the material heads of argument, or very flightly touches them, but pours forth his abufe againft us with a loud voice, and exclaims that my clients are rich, whilft he is indigent, it will inftantly appear to you, that the children were legitimate. Now, my clients, judges, have fpent a greater part of their fortune in the fervice of the ftate, than for their own advantage: feven times has Phanoftratus equipped a galley; he has ferved all the publick offices, and obtained many honours for the magnificence of his fhows. Chrreftratus too, when he was very young, furnifhed a veffel at his own expence; fince which time he has conducted the theatrical entertainments, and prefided over the exercifes at the feftival of Torches. Both of them have brought their contributions among the citizens of the richeft clafs; hitherto they have ferved together, and now the younger of the brothers conducts the chorus in the tragedies, has been enrolled among the three hundred, and contributes his fhare to defray the publick charges; fo that my friends ought not to be envied; but thefe affociates themfelves, I fwear by Jupiter and Apollo, will be far jufter objects of envy, if they obtain what they have no right to claim ; for, fhould the fortune of Philoctemon be decreed to Chæreftratus, he will difpenfe it liberally for your benefit; and, as he has hitherto done, or even with greater alacrity, will fuftain every burden, which you fhall impofe upon hire ; but fhould thefe men be mafters of fuch an eftate, they will begin by diffipating it, and end with claiming again the property of fome other perfon. I therefore entreat you, judges, left you fhould be deceived by thefe confederates, to pay a fcrupulous attention to their proteftation, concerning which you are now to decide ; and command them to make their defence confiftent with that writing, as we have opened our charge in conformity to it: they have there averred, that Philoctemon neither aliened nor devifed his eftate, which averment has been proved falfe; for we have fhown that he both made a will and difpofed of his fortune, as thofe, who were prefent at the tranfaction, have teftified. What elfe have they afferted ? That Philoctemon died without chil-dren-yet how can a man be faid to have died childlefs, who had adopted his nephew as his fon, to whom the law gives his inheritance as regularly as if he were an immediate defcendant? And it is exprefsly ordained, that, if a man having a fon by adoption, has afterwards another child, both of them fhall equally inherit his poffeffions. Let him demonftrate, therefore, the legitimacy of thefe children, as each of you can demonftrate his own : for this is not proved by mentioning the mother's name, but by declaring the truth, by producing the relations, and thofe who know that fhe was married to Euctemon; by examining the members of the fame borough and ward, if they have at any time heard, or can fay from their own knowledge, that he was at any publick expenfe on her account; by informing you where fhe was buried, where her monument ftands, and where her children, who furvived her, ftill perform facred rites; by fhowing, laftly, who faw fuch rites performed by Euctemon, and who, either among the fervants or among the citizens in general, knows any of thefe tranfactions. All this would be a proof, but mere invective is none ; and, if you compel my antagonift, judges, to prove the very facts, which he has averred to be true, you will make a pious decree according to the laws, and my clients will obtain fubftantial juftice.

SPEECH THE SIXTH.

ON THE ESTATE OF APOLLODORUS.

THE ARGUMENT.

THERE were three brothers, Eupolis, Thrasyllus, and Mneson ; the youngest of whom died without issue: the second left a son named Apollodorus. Eupolis, the surviving brother, was appointed guardian to his nephew, and had two daughters living, one of whom was married to Eschines, the other to Pronapis, the complainant in this cause.

The widow of Thrasyllus married Archedamus, who, perceiving that Apollodorus, his wife's son, was injured by his guardian, assisted him in applying to a court of justice, and obtained redress for him in two actions. This Archedamus had a daughter by the mother of Apollodorus, and that daughter, who married Lacratides, had a son, whom Apollodorus, on the death of his own son, adopted in his lifetime, and caused to be registered in the books of his kindred and ward by the name of Thrasyllus.

APOLLODORUS died; and Pronapis, in right of his wife, claimed the estate of the deceased, alledging that Thrasyllus was not entered in the register according to the true intent of his uncle, but that the adoption was a mere fiction and artifice.

The cause is, in the language of the Ancients, conjectural ; or, in the dialect of our bar, it is an issue, " Whether Thrasyllus was really adopted by Apollodorus, or not."

SPEECH THE SIXTH.

Tbrafyllus againf Pronapis.

IDID imagine, judges, that fuch adoptions as were made by a man in his perfect fenfes, who had conducted his adopted fon to the hrine of his anceftors, had prefented him to his kinfmen, had inferted his name in their common regifter, and had performed in perfon all the ufual ceremonies, were not to be controverted in a court of juftice; but that, if a man, apprehenfive of his approaching end, had bequeathed his eftate to another, had fealed his teftament, and committed it to the care of a friend, the validity of his will might afterwards be juftly difputed; fince by the former mode of alienation the intent of the party is openly manifefted, and the whole tranfaction made valid by the law, while the intention of a teftator, being more fecretly and obfcurely expreffed, is liable to fufpicion; whence many have contended againt the claimants under a will, that the inftrument itfelf was forged and void: but I now perceive this diftin tion to be of little avail; for, though my adoption was a fact of general notoriety, yet the daughter of Eupolis with her hufband and their advocates come to conteft my right to the poffeffions of Apollodorus.

Now had I obferved, that you were better pleafed with the oblique form of a proteftation than with a direct courfe of proceeding, I could have produced witneffes to prove that my right was inconteftable; becaufe I am the fon of the deceafed by a regular adoption; but as I am fenfible that the true merits of the caufe cannot be known by this method, I come to inform you of the whole tranfaction, and fhall thus preclude them from the power of imputing to me an unwillingnefs to meet them on the faireft ground: I will demonftrate then, not only that the many injuries, which Apollodorus had fuftained from his neareft relations, prevented him from leaving his fortune to them, but that he legally and juftly adopted me, who am his nephew, and the fon of his greateit benefactor.

I entreat you all, judges, to indulge me with a benevolent hearing; and, if I convince you, that thefe affociates have moft audacioufly claimed an eftate to which they have no colour of title, affift me in obtaining juftice: I will fpeak as concifely as I am able, in relating the whole affair from the beginning of it.

Eupolis, judges, Thrafyllus, and Mnefon, had the fame father and mother; and their patrimony, which they divided equally among themfelves, was fo confiderable, that each of them was appointed by you to fill the moft expenfive offices: two of thefe brothers perifhed nearly at the fame time; Mnefon died in the city, unmarried and childlefs ; and Thrafyllus, whofe fon Apollodorus afterwards adopted me, fell in the Sicilian expedition, in which he had been elected to command one of our gallies. The furviving brother, Eupolis, feized for his own ufe no fmall part of the inheritance: he took for himfelf, under the pretence of a legacy, the whole of Mnefon's property, one half of which belonged to Apollodorus; and fo faithful was he in his guardianfhip, that he was condemned t.o refund three talents, of which he had defrauded his nephew ; for my grandfather Archedamus, who had married the mother of Apoliodorus, and was grieved to fee him ftripped of all his fortune, took both my grandmother and him to his houfe, where he gave him an education, as if he had been his own fon, and, when he was adult, affifted him in claiming a moiety of Mnefon's eftate, and all the effects of which this careful truftee had deprived him. Thus, having obtained a decree for him in two fuits, he recovered his whole patrimony; on which account Apollodorus retained a violent enmity againft Eupolis, as long as he lived, whilft a firm friendfhip fubfifted, as it ought ${ }_{2}$ between him and Archedamus: but from his fubfequent conduct we may draw the moft certain conclufion, that Apollodorus was defirous of rewarding his benefactors for the advantages which they had procured him ; for, when my grandfather had the misfortune to be made captive by the enemy, Apollodorus contributed largely towards the payment of his ranfom, and even gave a hoftage for him, till he was able to raife the whole fum ; after which, when Archedamus was reduced from affluence to urgent neceffity, this truly grateful man un lertook the management of his affairs, giving him a competence out of his own fortune. Yet more; when he was going with the army to Corinth, he left his eftate by will to his half-fifter, whofe fon I am, and gave her in marriage to Lacratides, who has fince been appointed hierophant: fuch were his kindnefs and gratitude towards us, who had originally preferved him from ruin. Now that my affertions are true, and that Eupolis was actually caft in two a tions, one for his difhoneft guardianfip, and the other for a moiety of Mnefon's property, in both which caufes my grandfather was the advifer and advocate of Apollodorus, who by our means recovered his poffeffions, and afterwards requited the obligation with fuch liberality, I will prove by the cleareft evidence: call the witneffes hither. witnesses.

Such then and fo great were the bencfits, which we had conferred on him; but fuch was his hatred of Eupolis, who had attempted to rob him of fo large a fortune, that there was no poffibility of a reconciliation between them, nor can it be alledged that their connection was ever reftored: of their unalterable antipathy there cannot be a clearer proof, than that Eupolis, who was defcended from the fame common anceftor with Apollodorus, and knew him to be a wealthy man, offered him neither of his two daughters in marriage; yet fuch alliances have a natural power to appeafe the animofities, not of relations only, but of any indifferent men, when they intruft cach other with the deareft pledges of their affection: whether Eupolis, therefore, was to blame for not offering his daughter, or Apollodorus for not accepting her, this fact alone proves the continuance of their diffenfion.

What has already been faid concerning their difagreement, will, I think, be fufficient; for I am perfuaded, that many of the oldeft among you recollect their difputes and litigation ; fince the importance of the caufes, and the two dccrees which Archedamus obtained againft Eu-polis, gave celebrity to the affair : but I requeft you, judges, to hear with attention the proofs that he adopted me in his lifetime and in perfon, and that he appointed me fucceffor to his eftate, having infcribed my name in the records of his family, and in the publick regifter of his ward.

Apollodorus had a fon, whom he both educated and cherifhed, as it became him; and whom he hoped to leave heir to his fortune; but the boy dying of a fevere illnefs in the month of December in the laft year, his father, depreffed by fo cruel a misfortune, and defpairing at his age of having another child, called to his remembrance that family, from which in his youth he had received a fignal obligation ; and, going to my mother, his half-fifter, for whom he had the temdereft regard, he declared his intention to adopt me, and requefted her to refign me to him as his fon: fhe granted his requeft ; and fo eager was he to execute his refolution, that he carried me inftantly to his own houfe, and intrufted the whole management of it to my care ; confidering, that he was no longer capable of fuperintending all his affairs in perfon, and that I grew continually more and more able to tranfact them. At the feftival of the Tharge ia, therefo $e$, he conducted me to the aitars among thofe of the fame family and ward : now it is a rule with them, that whoever introduces to them either his own fon, or a fon by adoption, muft fwear by the facred rites, that the perfon introduced was born of an Athenian citizen in lawful marriage; when this oath has been taken, the other members of the focietyd etermine by ballot whether he fhall be admitted ; and, if they decide in his favour, he may then, but not before, have his name infcribed in the regifter: with fuch exactnefs are their ordinances and cuftoms obferved. This then being their law, the whole affembly, not doubting the veracity of Apollodorus, to whom they had adminiftered the ufual oath, and knowing that I was the fon of his fifter, voted unanimoufly for the enrollment of my name; and thus was I adopted by him in his lifetime, as the law permitted him to adopt me, and regiftered by the name of Thrafyllus, the fon of Apollodorous: read thefe depofitions, which prove the truth of what I have related. Depositions.

I fuppofed therefore, judges, that you would readily give credit to the witneffes, who have fworn, and to his relations, whofe behaviour has manifeftly declared, that Apollodorus performed the ceremony of my adoption conformably to law; for Eupolis left two daughters; one who was married to Pronapis, and is a claimant in this caufe; and another, the wife of Efchines the Lufian, who died leaving a fon, then of full age, named Thrafybulus: now there is a law, that, if a brother by the fame father die childlefs and inteftate, his effects fhall be divided equally between his furviving fifter, and the fon of another fifter, who died before him ; nor were my opponents ignorant of this law, as their very conduct has manifefted; for, when the fon of Eupolis was dead without children, Thrafybulus took a moiety of his eftate, which may be fairly eftimated at five talents. Thus the law gives the fifter and the fifter's fon an equal fhare of their father's and their brother's fortune ; but, when a coufin dies, or any kinfman in a remoter degree, the male relations are called to the fucceffion before the female; for it is enacted, that males and the children of males, if any be living, fhall be preferred, although they are lefs nearly related to the deceafed. The wife, therefore, of Pronapis ought not to have claimed even a part of this inheritance, but Thrafybulus would have contended for the whole, if he had not thought my adoption valid: whereas he neither at the beginning difputed my title, nor at any time fince has claimed the fortune of Apollodorus, but confeffes that I was legally appointed his fucceffor; whilft her advocates have attained fuch a height of impudence, that they have prefumed to claim the whole eftate. Take the laws, which my adverfaries have violated, and read them to the court. FIRST LAW. By this law the furviving fifter and her fifter's fon are entitled to an equal fhare of their brother's property. Now read the other, by which females are excluded in the fucceffion to the fortune of their coufins. SECOND LAW. Read this alfo which enacts, that, if there be no firft nor fecond coufins on the part of the father, thofe on the mother's part fhall fucceed to the eftate according to the rules there expreffed. THIRD LAW.

Such being the law, this male relation has not even claimed a part of the inheritance, while the hufband of a female has contended in her right for the whole: thus imagining, that mere audacity will avail them, they pufh it to any length in this caufe, and alledge, as a reafon for their exorbitant demand, that Thrafybulus was adopted into the houfe of Hippolochides, and emancipated from his own ; which I allow to be true, but infift that it is nothing to the purpofe; for how was he lefs entitled to claim this eftate? It was not in right of his father Afchines, but of his mother, that he fucceeded to half the fortune of Apollodorus, the fon of Eupolis; and by the fame right he would have made a juft claim to the prefent fucceffion, as he was preferred to any female claimant, had he not been convinced, that my adoption was legal and regular ; but Thrafybulus is not fo daring: now a title to a maternal eftate is not loft by emancipation, but every man continues to have the fame mother, whether he remain in his father's houfe, or be emancipated; fo that he was not deprived of his fucceffion to his maternal uncle Apollodorus, but received an equal portion with the furviving daughter of Eupolis, as the witneffes, whom I fhall now call, will prove. evidence.

It is apparent then, that not only the men of the fame family and ward bore teftimony to my adoption, but that Thrafybulus himfelf has in fact acknowledged, by not claiming the fortune, that he believed the act of Apollodorus to be conformable to law, and confequently valid; for, if that had not been his opinion, he would never have waived his right to fo large an inheritance: of this tranfaction I can produce other witneffes; for, before my return from the Pythian games, Apollodorus apprized his fellowburgeffes, that he had appointed me his heir, and had enrolled me among the members of his ward; informing them at the fame time, that he had committed his eftate to my care, and requefting them, if any accident fhould befal him, to enter me in the publick regifter by the name of Thrafyllus the fon of Apollodorus, and by no other name. When they heard this declaration (though the friends of Pronapis complained in their affembly, and difputed the validity of my adoption, yet) the burgeffes, from their own knowledge of the fact, took the accuftomed oath, and inferted my name in their regifter, as Apollodorus had enjoined them, being fully perfuaded that my adoption was perfectly legal: call the witneffes to thefe facts. witnesses. So clear, judges, is the evidence of my adoption, an inveterate enmity having fubfifted between the deceafed and the family of Eupolis, and the ftricteft friendfhip having been maintained between him and us, to whom alfo he was nearly related: but, had he neither detefted them nor loved our family, he would never, as I hope eafily to convince you, have left his poffeffions to my antagonifts; for all they, who think their end approaching, look forward with a prudent care that their houfes may not become defolate, but that there may be fome perfon to attend their funeral rites, and to perform the legal ceremonies at their tombs; if, therefore, they have no children, yet they leave heirs by appointment; nor is this merely the cuftom of private men, but it is ordained by the publick and common laws, which command the Archon to provide that families be not extinguifhed; now Apollodorus was perfectly fenfible, that, if he were to leave his eftate to thefe men, he fhould occafion the defertion of his houfe. Why fo? Becaufe he had feen thefe two fifters inherit the poffeffions of Apollodorus their brother, without appointing a fucceffor to him, although they had fons of their own, whom they might have appointed ; he had feen their hufbands fell the lands and all the effects which they had inherited, to the amount of five talents, which money they divided among themfelves, and he had obferved the fhameful and deplorable defolation of the family. Since then he faw that the memory of a brother was fo little revered, how could he have expected, even had friendfhip fubfifted between them, to be treated with due veneration, when he was a coufin only, and not a brother? He could not hope it. Now that they appointed no heir to fupport the family of that Apollodorus, yet are in poffeffion of his fortune, and have wafted an eftate, which was known to fupply the expenfe of equipping gallies, the witneffes, who fhall next be called, will give ample proof. Evrdence.

If fuch therefore were their difpofitions, and fo violent was their enmity to Apollodorus, by whom I was adopted, how could he have acted more wifely than as he did act ? Should he have taken a child from any of his friends, and left his property to him? Yet it would have been uncertain even to the parents of that child, by reafon of his tender age, whether he would be a virtuous or a worthlefs man ; but of my good qualities he had received a fufficient fpecimen ; for he well knew, how affectionately I had behaved to my father and mother, how attentively to my friends, how prudently I managed my own affairs, how far removed I had been in my magiftracy from injuftice or corruption: of all this he was fully convinced, when he committed his poffeffions to my care; nor was I a ftranger to him, but his fifter's fon, nor were the benefits inconfiderable, which we had conferred on him; nor was I lowminded and unambitious enough to aliene his property, as my opponents have aliened the fortune of their brother, but was willing and eager, after his example, to furnifh and command your fhips, to lead your armies, to conduct your entertainments, to perform whatever you fhould order, If then I was his kinfman, his friend, and his benefactor, both of an exalted mind and of approved virtue, who can doubt that his adoption of me was the act of a prudent and a grateful man? Even in this very year I have performed one of thofe duties, which Apollodorus himfelf would have applauded: I prefided over the exercifes in the Promethean games with liberality and magnificence, as the whole tribe know, and as many of them will now teftify. Witnesses.

Thefe, judges, are the lawful and reafonable grounds of our prefent claim: we therefore entreat you to affift us in fupporting it, for the fake both of Apollodorus and of his father, whom you will find, if you reflect upon their conduct, to have been no ufelefs citizens, but infpired with all poffible zeal to promote your intereft ; for his father Thrafyllus not only filled every other expenfive office, but continued, as long as he lived, to command a galley, which was not built by contribution, as many veffels are now made, but at his own expenfe; nor was he fecond only in the command, but ftood alone; nor did he intermit his duty for two years, as he might have done, but performed it conftantly ; and not with negligence or in hafte, but with the moft fplendid preparations; for which noble conduct you approved and honoured him ; and, remembering his laudable actions, would not fuffer his fon to be ftripped of his property, but compelled his falfe guardian to reftore it. Nor was Apollodorus himfelf like this Pronapis, who, to defraud the publick, pretended that his fortune was fmall, but taking his rank among thofe of the equeftrian order, he fuftained the charges of the higheft magiftran cies; not endeavouring by violence to take the property of others, and contriving that you fhould reap no advantage from it, but openly declaring the full amount of his eftate, and bearing with alacrity whatever burden you impofed: thus he ftrove to live with elegance on his own income, without injuring any man; thinking it incumbent on him to be moderate in his private expenfes, that he might be able to dedicate the remainder of his fortune to the fervice of the publick. Wich this overplus what office did he not completely fill? What fum was he not the firft to contribute? In what part of his duty was he deficient? He obtained the prize in the youthful games, which he conducted; and yonder tripod remains a monument of his liberality on that occafion. What are the duties of a virtuous citizen? To preferve his own fortune ; not, like diffolute and abandoned men, to attack the property of others; and, if the ftate has need of fupplies, to contribute among the firft, without concealing any part of his poffeffions. Such then was Apollodorus; and you will make but a juft return for his ardour in ferving you, if you eftablifh his adoption of me according to his clear intent: nor will you find even me, as far as my youth has qualified me for your fervice, either a bad or an idle citizen; for I have borne arms in all your expeditions, and continue to obey the commands of my eountry, as men of my age fhould obey them. For the fake, therefore, of Apollodorus and his father, as well as of me and my family, confider our caufe with attention; efpecially as our adverfaries have never furnifhed a fingle galley, but have diffipated and reduced to nothing an eftate of five talents: whereas we have already filled your moft chargeable offices, and will again fill them with eagerneis, if you effectuate the intention of my uncle, and give me the eftate, which he appointed me to inherit. That I may not feem tedious in expatiating longer on thefe facts, I will defcend, as foon as I have fuccinctly recapitulated to you the feveral points, on which we reft our refpective claims.

As my own mother was the fifter of Apollodorus, as an intimate friendithip fubfifted between us, never interrupted by any difagreement, I, whom he adopted as his fon, when he was living and in his perfect fenfes, I, who was enrolled among thofe of the fame family and ward with himfelf, demand the eftate which he gave me, and defire that thefe men may not have it in their power to extinguifh fo illuftrious a family: but what are the pretenfions of Pronapis? He firft took a moiety of the fortune, which had been left by his wife's brother, and now he claims this inheritance, though others are more nearly related to the deceafed than his wife can pretend to be: yet he has neither appointed a fon to fupply the place of his brother, but has fuffered his family to become extinct, nor would he have acted otherwife with regard to my uncle; and he makes this claim, though Apollodorus had fo great an averfion to him, and a reconciliation never afterwards took place between them. This, judges, you will confider; and will alfo recollect, that I am the nephew of the deceafed, and that the wife of Pronapis is only his coufin: that fhe has inherited two eftates, whilft I fucceed to this alone as a fon by adoption; that fhe laftly was not well inclined to him, whofe property we claim, but that I and my father were his real benefactors. Thus reflecting and reafoning with yourfelves, give a fentence agreeable to juftice: it would be fuperfluous to add more; for I am perfuaded, that no part of my argument has efcaped your attention.

speech the seventh,

ON THE ESTATE OF CIRON.

THE ARGUMENT.

CIRON being dead without leaving a son, his nephew entered upon his estate ; and the clients of Isæus brought an action to recover it, insisting that they had the better title as grandsons of the deceased by his legitimate daughter: there are two questions in the cause, an issue of fact, whether the complainants were lawfully descended from Ciron or not ; and an issue in law, whether a daughter's or a brother's son has more right to the property of an intestate. The writer of the Greek argument to this speech appears to have mistaken the law of Athens, which will be more fully explained in the commentary.

SPEECH THE SEVENTH.

The Grandjons of Ciron againft bis Nepbew.

IT is impoffible, judges, to fupprefs our juft indignation, when men are not only bold enough to claim the property of others, but even hope by their fophifms to refine away the found rules of law, as our adverfaries are now attempting to do ; for, although my grandfather Ciron died not childlefs, but left me and my brother, the fons of his legitimate daughter, yet thefe men have both claimed his eftate, as his next of kin, and infult us with afferting that we are not his grandfons, and that he never had a daughter in his life; to this audacity have they been incited by their fordid love of gain, and allured by the value of Ciron's eftate, which they violently feized, and now unjuftly poffefs; being abfurd enough to alledge that he died in indigence, yet contending at the fame time that they have a right to his fortune. Now I confider myfelf as contending in this caufe, not with the nominal party to the fuit, but with Diocles of Phlya, whofe mad violence has procured him the name of Creftes; for it was he, who firf inftigated my opponent to give us this trouble, with an intent to deprive us of our fucceffion to the property of our grandfather, and has thus expofed us to danger, that he may not be compelled to reftore the goods which he has embezzled, if he can perfuade you by his falfe allegations to pronounce your decree in his favour. Thefe being their machinations, it is neceffary for you to be informed of the whole tranfaction, that, when you are fully apprized of every circumftance, you may decide the caufe from your perfect knowledge of it ; and, if you have ever attended to any other caufe, hear this, I intreat you, with attention: juftice indeed requires it; for in the many fuits with which Athens abounds, no man will be found to have invaded the poffeffions of another with more impudence and a greater contempt of decency than thefe confederates. It is no eafy tafk, judges, for one, wholly void of experience in courts, to enter into a conteft of fo great importance againft the premeditated quibbles of fubtle fpeakers, and againft witneffes prepared to violate the truth ; yet I am not without hopes of being reftored to my right by your fentence, and of fpeaking fo far at leaft with tolerable propriety as to fupport my juft demand, unlefs fome fuch misfortune fhould befall me as I cannot even now help fearing: I fupplicate you, therefore, judges, to hear me with candour, and, if yout think me injured, to redrefs the injury which I have furtained.

Firf, then, I will convince you, that my mother was the legitimate daughter of Ciron, and will prove by hearfay evidence what happened a long time ago, and by living witneffes what it is fill poffible for them to remember: to this I will add a number of circumftances, which are often more decifive than the teftimony of fallible men; and when I have evinced the truth of this point beyond a doubt, I will demonftrate, that we have a jufter claim than our adverfaries to the eftate of the deceafed. I will begin my narrative from that part of the cafe, whence they alfo began their argument.

My grandfather Ciron, judges, married his firft coufin, the daughter of his mother's fifter, who bore my mother, and died three years after marriage. Ciron, having this only daughter, took for his fecond wife the fifter of Diocles, by whom he had two fons: with her and her children my mother was educated, and, when fhe attained a proper age, was given by her father in marriage to Naufimenes of Cholargia, with a fortune of twenty-five minas, together with clothes and ornaments of gold. Three or four years after this, Naufimenes died of a violent diforder, leaving no children by my mother, whom Ciron received again into his family (but without her entire portion, as her hufband had been in diftrefs) and gave her to my father with a fortune of a thoufand drachmas. That all thefe tranfactions really paffed, as I relate them, and fully difprove the falfe pretences on which our adverfaries now infift, I difcovered a method of evincing with the utmoft clearnefs ; for, whether my mother was, or was not, the daughter of Ciron, whether fhe made part of his family or not, whether he folemnized her two nuptials, and what fortune he gave with her to each of her hufbands, all this muft neceffarily be known to his fervants of both fexes: defiring therefore in addition to the evidence, which I fhall adduce, to confirm thefe facts by an extorted confeffion, that you might give the greater credit to fuch witneffes as had previoufly exhibited a proof of their veracity, I propofed to my antagonifts, that the male and female flaves fhould be queftioned on the rack concerning their knowledge of thefe occurrences; but this very Diocles, who will prefently intreat you to believe his witneffes, declined fo eafy a mode of difcovering the truth. If then his refufal to accept my offer, which muft be imputed to his fear of fo decifive an inveftigation, be clearly proved, what remains to be thought of his witneffes? Nothing, in my opinion, but that they are forefworn: in proof of this fack, read firft the depofition, which I have brought. DEPOSITION.

Now you are all, I believe, perfuaded, that an inquifition by torture, both in publick and private caufes, is the beft and fureft mode of inveftigating truth; nor, when both free men and flaves are prefent, and it is expedient to obtain a difcovery of facts, is it your cuftom to examine the free men, but to rack the flaves, and thus to extort a true relation of all that has happened : in this refpect you think and act wifely, judges; for you well know, that many perfons examined in the ufual form have given evidence indubitably falfe; but of all thofe, wha have been expofed to torture, none have ever been convicted of falfehood: and will this moft audacious of men requeft you to believe his artful pretences, and his witneffes, who fwear againft truth, when he declines a mode of proof fo exact and conclufive? Our conduct is widely different ; and, as we firft propofed to difcover the whole tranfaction by the means of torture, to which propofal we have proved that they would not confent, we think it reafonable, that our witneffes fhould be credited. Read next thefe depofitions, which prove my mother's legitimacy. DEPOSITIONS.

Whom can we fuppofe acquainted with what happened fo long ago? Thofe, no doubt, who were intimate with my grandfather : their teftimony then has been repeated by many who heard them affert the truth of it. Who muft unavoidably know, that my mother was given in marriage? Thofe, who betrothed her, and thofe who were prefent at the time of the affiance : to this point, therefore, we have adduced the evidence of perfons, who were connected both with my father and with Naufimenes. Who muft be confcious that fhe was bred in the houfe of Ciron, and that fhe was his legitimate daughter? My adverfaries themfelves have fhown this to be true, by declining the difcovery propofed ; fo that you cannot juftly difbelieve our witneffes, but have great reafon to fufpect the credibility of theirs.

To thefe arguments may be added many circumftances, which prove that our mother was the daughter of Ciron ; for, as it became a man to treat the fons of his own daughter, he never made a facrifice without us; but, whether he folemnized the greater feftivals or the lefs, we were always prefent and always partook of them; nor were we invited to thefe only, but he conftantly carried us into the country to the Dionyfian feafts: with him we fate to view the games, and at his houfe we paffed every holiday. Befides, he moft affiduoufly paid his indeed, of this fact is now fo apparent, and fo many perfons have a perfect knowledge of it, that it is no where difputed. Call up the witneffes, who will prove what I have laft afferted. Evidence.

Yet further, judges; that we are the acknowledged grandfons of Ciron, the behaviour of Diocles himfelf, after my grandfather's death, will clearly demonftrate; for I went, accompanied by one of my friends, a coufin of my father, to bring the body to my own houfe, from which I intended to begin the funeral proceffion: Diocles was not within; but, when I entered, and was directing the affiftants, whom I had brought, to remove the corfe, my grandfather's widow intreated me to begin the funeral from her houfe, offering to affift us in laying out and embalming the body; fhe wept and fupplicated, judges, till fhe prevailed; and, meeting Diocles, I told him before witneffes, that, as his fifter had requefted me, the remains of Ciron fhould be carried to the place of burial from the houfe in which he died: to this he made no objection, but faid that he had brought fome things neceffary for the funeral, and had given earneft for them ; he therefore exacted a promife from me to pay what they coft, and defired me to give him back the earneft, engaging to bring me to thofe who had received it of him : foon after indeed he affected to infinuate, that Ciron died infolvent, though I had not then fpoken a word about his fortune. Now if he had not known me to be the grandfon of Ciron, he would never have made fuch an agreement with me, but would rather have addreffed me thus.-What man are you? What concern have you with the burial? I know you not: come not within my doors. This he fhould then have faid himfelf, which he has now fuborned others to fay: nothing however of the kind was even intimated by him, but he requefted me to bring him the money on the next morning; and here, to prove the truth of this narrative, let the witneffes be called. evidence.

Nor was he alone filent on this head; but even the prefent claimant of the eftate advanced nothing in oppofition to my right, till he was inftigated by this fellow to difpute it ; for when I carried the money on the following day, Diocles refufed to accept it, alledging that he had received it from my adverfary : yet I was not prevented from joining in the funeral rites, but affifted at the whole ceremony; the expenfes of which were not borne by my opponent, but were defrayed out of the money which Ciron left : now it would have become him, if the deceafed had not been really my grandfather, to have thruft me out, to have expelled me, and to have hindered me from conducting the burial in conjunction with them. Our fituations in this refpect were by no means fimilar; for I permitted him, as the nephew of my grandfather, to act in concert with me; but he fhould not have fuffered me to join with him, if that had been true, which they now have the impudence to alledge. To fuch a degree, indeed, was Diocles confounded with the truth of my affertions, when in my funeral oration I accufed him by name of an attempt to invade my property, and of inciting my antagonift to make this unjuft claim, that he durft not even mutter a fyllable againft me, much lefs infinuate what he now fo audacioufly advances. Call thofe alfo who will prove this fact. witnesses.

What now, in the name of the gods, can induce us to believe what we hear afferted? Is it not the teftimony of witneffes? I think it undeniable. How can their evidence be procured? Is it not by the fear of torture? Moft affuredly. Why then fhould you give no credit to the allegations of my adverfaries? Is it, becaufe they declined fo complete a proof? Yes, beyond a doubt. How is it poffible, therefore, to demonftrate more clearly, that my mother was Ciron's legitimate daughter, than by producing hearfay evidence of what happened many years ago, and by giving you the pofitive teftimony of living witneffes, who know that fhe was educated in his houfe, was confidered as his child, was twice betrothed by him, and twice given in marriage ; and by fhowing moreover, that they refufe to examine the flaves who had a perfect knowledge of all thefe tranfactions? The whole of this I have given in evidence ; and a more convincing proof, by all the deities of heaven, cannot be produced ; but what has already been advanced feems fully fufficient to evince the juftice of my demand.

I now proceed to give you entire conviction, that I have by law a greater right than my antagonift to the eftate of Ciron; and it is apparent, I believe, to all of you, that thofe who are defcended only from the fame fock with the deceafed are not more nearly related to him than thofe who are defcended from himfelf: how, indeed, fhould it be fo, when the firft are his collateral kinfmen, and the others his lineal defcendants? Since however they are daring enough to argue againft the manifeft reafon of the thing, I will prove my point more diffufely by arguments drawn from the laws themfelves: firf, if my mother, the daughter of Ciron, were ftill living, if her father had died inteftate, and if this man had been his brother inftead of his nephew, he would have a power, indeed, to marry his daughter ; but no man would have a right to his eftate, except her children, to whom the law would give it at the age of fixteen years; if, then, were fhe alive, he would not have been entitled to her fortune, but her fons would have been the lawful heirs, it is evident, that, as fhe died leaving children, they only, not thefe confederates, fhould fucceed to her poffeffions. Nor does this law only confirm my title; but that concerning diftreffed parents eftablifhes the point, for which I contend: had my grandfather been alive and in want of neceffaries, the guilt of fuffering him to continue in diftefs would have been imputed, not to our adverfary, but to us; for the law enjoins us to fupport our parents, by whom are meant our fathers and mothers, grandfathers and grandmothers, and their fathers and mothers, if they are living; fince, as they are the root and ftock of the family, and as their defcendants regularly fucceed to their property, it is juft and natural to maintain them, how little foever they have to leave. Can it then be thought reafonable, that, even if they had had nothing, we fhould have been liable to a profecution for not fupporting them, yet, if they leave a fortune, that thefe men, not we, fhould fucceed to it? By no means.

I will begin, then, with the neareft of a man's collateral relations, and will call for your fentiments on the comparifon between them and his lineal defcendants ; for this method will eafily convince you. Who was more nearly related to Ciron, his daughter or his brother? No doubt, his daughter; for the defcended immediately from him, but he only derived his defcent from the fame anceftor. Is the brother to be preferred in the order of fucceffion, or the daughter's fons? Her fons indifputably; for theirs is a direct defcent, not a collateral relationfhip: fince then we are fo far nearer than a brother, we muft have confiderably a better claim than this man, who is only a nephew. But I fear, left, by dwelling too long on a point which cannot fairly be difputed, I fhould tire your patience ; for all of you inherit the poffeffions of your fathers, grandfathers, and anceftors of a higher degree, by the uncontrovertible title of a lineal defcent : the cafe is fo clear, that I cannot believe there ever before was fuch a conteft. I fhall therefore conclude this part of my argument, with reading the law concerning the difo treffes of parents; and fhall then explain to you the motives which induced my opponents to harafs me with this caufe. the law.

The property of Ciron, judges, confifted of a farm in Phlya well worth a talent, and two houfes in the city, one of which, near the temple of Bacchus in the Marfhes, was occupied by a tenant, and might be fold for twenty minas; the other, which he inhabited, was worth thirteen : he had, befides, fome flaves who worked for his advantage, two female fervants and a girl, together with utenfils and houfehold furniture, which, with the flaves, were worth as much as the houfe. His whole real eftate may be valued at rather more than a talent and a half; and he had no inconfiderable fum of money out at intereft, from which he received a good annual income. Diocles and his fifter had long projected to poffefs themfelves of this fortune; and, as foon as the two fons of Ciron were dead, he did not remove her from the old man (though fhe might then have borne children by another hufband), fearing left, if they were feparated, he fhould difpofe, as he ought to have done, of his poffeffions; but perfuaded her to continue with him, to pretend that fhe was enfeint, and afterwards to alledge that fhe had mifcarried; for he knew, that, if Ciron could entertain hopes of having other children, he would not adopt either of us. As to my father, Diocles perpetually calumniated him, afferting that he had confpired to feize the property of Ciron: his next ftep was to defraud my grandfather of all his money, while he pretended to execute the office of receiving his intereft, and managing his landed property. Thus did he inveigle the old man by adulation and fervility, till he had all his effects within his grafp; yet, well knowing that after Ciron's death I fhould have a juft claim to his fortune, he did not prevent me from attending and converfing with him: he feared, I imagine, the confequences of my refentment at that time; but he has now fuborned a man to controvert my right to the fucceffion, and, if he fhould be victorious, would allow him a fmall fhare of the plunder, while he means to fecure the whole inheritance for himfelf; yet, even to this very man, he did not at firft acknowledge that Ciron left any eftate, but afferted that he died in abfolute indigence. As foon as my grandfather was dead, this Diocles made preparations for the funeral ; the expenfe of which, as you have heard from the witneffes, he required me to defray; yet he afterwards refufed to accept the money from me, on pretence that he had before received it from my opponent; thus artfully intending to let it appear, that he himfelf, not I, was preparing to bury the deceafed: when, therefore, he raifed this controverfy, both concerning Ciron's houfe and his other poffeffions, yet flupidly infifted, in the fame moment, that he had left nothing at all, I thought it an improper time (and the opinion of my friends coincided with mine) to remove the body by force; but I affifted them, and attended the burial, the charges of which were fupplied out of Ciron's eftate. In this manner was I compelled to act; but, left it fhould give them an advantage over me, if they could fay with truth that I bore no part of the expenfe, I contributed my fhare, by the advice of a lawyer whom I confulted; and I performed facred rites in the handfomeft manner on the ninth day after the funeral, both that they might be prevented from the impiety of performing them, and might not feem to have expended the whole fum without my participation.

Thefe, judges, are the tranfactions which relate to my caufe, and thefe are the reafons which induced my enemies to attack me; but, were you perfectly acquainted with the fhamelefs impudence of Diocles, you would not hefitate a moment in giving full credit to my whole narrative; for this wretch actually robbed his three half-finters, who were left heireffes to their father, of the fine eftate which makes him now fo fplendid, by pretending that he was the adopted fon of their father, who, in reality, made no will, on purpofe to exclude him: and when thofe who had married two of his fifters commenced a fuit againft him for their fortunes, he fo malignantly entangled the hufband of the eldeft in the fnares of perverted law, that he caufed him unjuftly to be marked with infamy; for which, though an action has been brought againft him, he has not yet fuffered the punifhment he deferves ; and, having hired a flave to affaffinate the hufband of the fecond fifter, he privately fent the affaffin out of Attica, and accufed the wife of the murder: then, intimidating her with his audacioufnefs, and compelling her to be filent, he obtained the guardianfhip of her fon by the deceafed, and ftripped him of his property, keeping all the cultivated land in his own poffeffion, and giving his ward by way of compenfation a few ftony fields. There are perfons now prefent, who know this to be true : they are afraid, indeed, of Diocles; but, perhaps they will be ready to give their evidence; if not, I will produce others, who have an equal knowledge of the facts. Firft, however, call up thofe who are prefent. witnesses.

This man then, fo profligate and fo rapacious, who plundered the inheritance of his fifters, is not contented with that plunder; but, becaufe a juft punifhment has not yet overtaken him, he comes to deprive me alfo of my grandfather's eftate, and having, as we are credibly informed, promifed to give my adverfary two minas out of the fpoils, has expofed us to the danger of lofing not our fortune only, but our country ; fince, if he can deceive you into a belief, that our mother was not a citizen of Athens, neither are we citizens; for we were born after the archonfhip of Euclid. Is this litigation then, which his lies have fet on foot againft me, of trifling confequence? When my grandfather and father were alive, no charge whatever was brought againft us, and our right was always confidered as indifputable; but fince their death, it will be fome reproach to us, even if we are fuccefsful, that our title was ever difputed ; a reproach, for which we may thank this execrable monfter, this frantick Oreftes, who, having been caught in adultery, and fuffered the chaftifement which he deferved, cannot even now defift from his crimes, as many, who well know his guilt, can teftify.

The difpofition and character of this fellow you have now partly heard, and fhall hear it more at large when I have brought him to a trial in a profecution, which I meditate : in the mean time, I fupplicate and adjure you, permit him not to triumph over me, by ftripping me of the fortune which my grandfather left ; but, as far as each of you is able, give me affiftance. Sufficient evidence has been laid before you: we have read our depofitions, have opened to you what their flaves would infallibly have confeffed, and have produced the laws themfelves; by all which we have proved, that we are the fons of Ciron's legitimate daughter, and confequently that his eftate comes not to them, but to us, as his lineal defcendants: calling therefore to your remembrance the oaths, by which you are bound to decide impartially, and the laws, which have been adduced, pronounce your fentence agreeably to juftice. I fee no occafion for a longer argument, as I believe you perfectly comprehend the whole cafe: let the officer, however, read this remaining depofition, that Diocles was taken in adultery. DeposiTION.

SPEECH THE EIGHTH

THE ARGUMENT.

THE mother of the defendant in this cause had a son named ASTYPHILUS, by her first husband Euthycrates, whose nephew Cleon, after the death of Astyphilus, produced a will, by which Cleon's son was appointed to inherit the fortune of the deceased. The client of Isæus contends that the will of his half-brother was forged.

SPEECH THE EIGHTH.

The Son of Theophraftus againgt Cleon.

Astyphilus, for whofe eftate we contend in this caufe, and who was my half-brother, judges, by the fame mother, died at Mitylene, whither he had failed with the army ; and that he never adopted a fon, nor ever aliened his eftate, or difpofed of it by will, fo that no man but myfelf has a right to his poffeffions, I fhall endeavour to prove, agreeably to the oath which I have previoufly taken. This Cleon, my antagonift, was the firft coufin to the deceafed by his father's fide, and it is his own fon, whom he pretends that Aftyphilus adopted: now Cleon's father was transferred by emancipation into another houfe, in which the whole crew of confederates are ftill refident, fo that by law they bear no relation at all to the laft poffeffor of this eftate ; but, as there could be no queftion on this head, they have produced a will, which I fhall demonftrate, I think, to be forged, and are now ftriving, judges, to rob me of my brother's fortune. So confident, indeed, was Cleon (nor has his confidence, it feems, forfaken him) of his exclufive title to the eftate in difpute, that no fooner was Aftyphilus reported to be flain, while my father was confined by illnefs, and I was bearing arms abroad, than he rufhed upon the land and claimed all my brother's effects in right of his fon, not waiting, as he ought, for your determination in his favour ; yet, when the remains of their coufin were brought to Athens, this fictitious fon of his neither laid out the body nor buried it; but fome of his friends and fellow-foldiers, confidering the malady of my father, and my abfence from the city, performed the laft honours to the dead by affifting at his funeral rites, and led my fick father to the tomb, weil knowing that his piety would be acceptable to the departed fpirit ; all which facts will be attefted by the friends themfelves who were prefent at thefe ceremonies. WITNESSES. That Aftyphilus was not interred by my opponent, has been given in evidence; nor will he himfelf deny it.

On my return then from the war, when I found that thefe affociates were enjoying the fruits of my eftate, and heard Cleon affert that the will, by which my brother adopted his fon, had been left with Hierocles of Hephæfia, I went to Hierocles; not ignorant of his clofe connection with Cleon, but believing that he would hardly dare to fpeak falfely concerning the deceafed, efpecially as he was our uncle: yet, when I interrogated him on the fubject, he anfwered (regardlefs of thefe confiderations), that the will, which he had received from Aftyphilus, was then in his poffeffion; and here, to prove that he made this anfwer, let a depofition be read. deposition. Since, therefore, judges, none of my brother's friends were prefent at his death, and fince his body was brought hither in my abfence, it is neceffary for me to convince you, by arguments drawn from their own affertions, that the will which they produce was fabricated by them, and that no will at all was made by Aftyphilus ; for it is reafonable to fuppofe, that, if he had intended to leave an heir by adoption, he would have provided effectually for the fecurity of his appointment, and taken care that his adopted fon fhould not only poffefs his eftate, bui have accefs to the fhrines of his anceftors, and perform the accuftomed rites both to their fhades and to his own : he muft have been fenfible too, that his intentions would take effect, not if he left a will unattefted by his friends, but if he firft convoked his relations; next, thofe of the fame borough and ward ; and laftly, as many of his intimate acquaintance as he could affemble, to attend the execution of fo important an inftrument; for fuch precaution would have made it eafy to refute any perfon whatever, who might falfely claim the eftate as legatee or as next of kin; but nothing of this fort appears to have been done by Aftyphilus, who called together none of his friends to atteft this pretended will, as I fhall prove by the teftimony of thofe friends themfelves, unlefs any one of them has been fuborned by Cleon, to declare that he was fummoned. evidence.

Now Cleon will probably contend, that the evidence, juft given by thefe witnefles of their entire ignorance that Aftyphilus ever made a will, is not conclufive; but, in my apprehenfion, when the controverfy turns upon the exiftence of a teftament and the adoption of a fon, the declarations of intimate friends, that they were not prefent at a tranfaction of fo much confequence, ought to have far more weight than the allegations of mere ftrangers that they were prefent; nor would Cleon himfelf, who was never remarked for fimplicity, have neglected to convene any relations of Aftyphilus, who were in the city, or any other perfons whom he knew to be at all connected with him, that they might atteft a will, by which his own fon was appointed heir to an eftate ; for no man could have prevented the teftator from difpofing as he pleafed of his own property, and fuch conduct would have removed the fufpicion naturally arifing from a will made in fecret. Had it been the defign of Aftyphilus, judges, to conceal from all men, that he had appointed the fon of Cleon as his heir, or that he had left any teftimony whatever, it muft be fuppofed, that no witnefs at all would have fubfribed his name; but, fince they fhow you the names of witneffes, and thofe not of his acquaintance, but of any ftrangers whom he might happen to meet, it is not poffible to conceive that the will can be genuine; for I cannot perfuade myfelf that a man, who was going to nominate an heir, would fummon any witneffes, but fuch as were to be partakers for the future of the fame rights and the fame communion with the perfon to be nominated : the deceafed, however, could have no inducement to keep this tranfaction fecret; for, as the law permits every one to difpofe of his property according to his inclination, no man needs be afhamed to have fuch an inftrument attefted by any number of witneffes.

Now confider, judges, the time when Aftyphilus made, as they affert, a teftamentary difpofition of his fortune; for they alledge, that he made it when he was at the point of failing with the forces to Mitylene: by this account he muft have had a fingular foreknowledge of events; for he firft ferved at Corinch, next in Theffaly, and during the whole Theban war ; nor did he fail, wherever he heard that an army was raifed, to offer his fervice ; yet not on one of thefe occafions did he make a will, but deferred that ceremony till his laft expedition to Mitylene, in which he perifhed. Can it feem credible then to any one among you, that, when Aftyphilus was formerly preparing for his other campaigns, and well knew the danger of them all, he left no directions whatever concerning his affairs, but that, when he was going to fail as a volunteer, in which character he was lefs expofed to peril, and muft have entertained hopes of returning faie, he fhould then only write his will, and fhould lofe his life in the adventure? Can it be thought credible, that the contingency of events fhould have correfponded fo exactly with his conduct?

Without purfuing this argument farther, I will lay before you, judges, the ftrongeft evidence that the allegations of my adverfaries are falfe; for I will prove that Aftyphilus bore the moft violent enmity to Cleon ; fo violent, that, rather than adopt the fon of the man, whom he moft detefted, he would have ordered in his will, that none of his relations fhould have the leaft communication with him; for Thudippus, Cleon's father, having quarrelled with Euthycrates, the father of Aftyphilus, concerning the divifion of his inheritance, fo cruclly beat him, that he expired after languifhing for a few days, and his death was indubitably occafioned by the blows, which he had received: the truth of this can be proved by many of the Araphenians, who were at that time employed in cultivating the adjacent lands; but it is not in my power to call any of them, who will pofitively accufe Thudippus of fo atrocious a crime. As to Hierocles, who faw him furike his brother, I know his unwillingnefs to give any evidence tending to defeat the will which he now produces, and which, as he alledges, was left in his cuftody: let him be called, however, that he may either publickly confirm the truth of my affertion, or refufe to be examined. Witness.

This, I was perfectly fure, would be his anfwer ; for it is confiftent with the conduct of a man, who wifhes to perfuade you that he knows to be true what in fact never happened, to decline giving evidence of what he really knows to be true: but I will call another witnefs, who is married to the grandmother of Aftyphilus, and who will fwear that Euthycrates, juft before he died, commanded his friends to prevent any of Thudippus's family from approaching his tomb. Evidence,

When Aftyphilus, therefore, heard this fact related in his childhood, both by thefe witneffes and by his other kinfmen, he determined, as foon as his reafon began to dawn, rather to perifh than hold any converfation with Cleon; thinking it impious to converfe with the fon of that man, who was accufed of having murdered his father: that his deteftation of Cleon continued through his whole life, I will prove by the teftimony of witneffes, who know the truth of my affertion. witnesses.

Had it not been for this reafon, it muft be imagined, that whenever Aftyphilus attended thofe feafts, which other Athenians ufually attend, he would have gone to them, accompanied by no man but Cleon, who bore fo near a relation to him, who belonged to the fame borough, and whofe fon, above all, he was going to adopt; but the depofition of his fellow-burgeffes, which the officer fhall read, will prove that he never once appeared at the feafts in company with Cleor. deposition.

With no better claim to the affection of Aftyphilus, this man has the boldnefs to produce his own fon as heir by appointment to the deceafed; but why fhould Cleon alone be cenfured? Even Hierocles, our uncle, is audacious enough to come with a will which was never executed, and to affert that my brother committed it to his care. This conduct, Hierocles, is a forry compenfation for the many marks of kindnefs which you received when your fortune was more narrow than at prefent, as well from Theophraftus my father, as from Aftyphilus himfelf; for you are attempting to exclude me, who am the fon of your benefactor and of your own fifter, from that fucceffion which the law has aliotted me, to injure by your falfe affertion the memory of the dead, and, as far as you can prevail, to give his eftate to the man whom he abhorred. Before the inheritance, judges, was even formally claimed, this very Hierocles, who was confcious that none but myfelf had a right to the eftate of Aftyphilus, applied fucceffively to all the acquaintance of the deceafed, offered the whole fortune to fale, and incited entire ftrangers to fet up a title, alledging that he was the uncle of Aftyphilus, and promifing, if any one would give him a due fhare of the plunder, to produce a will of his nephew in favour of his confederate ; yet now, when he has concluded his bargain with Cleon, and has contracted for a divifion of the fpoils, he has the confidence to expect that his ftory will gain credit, and would be ready, I dare fay, to forfwear himfelf, if an oath were tendered to him by my adverfaries: thus, for the fake of me, who am his kinfman, he would not even give in evidence what was ftrictly true; but, for the benefit of one who has not a fhadow of right, he has not fcrupled to propagate lies, and comes with a forged inftrument to make you believe what never happened, thinking the fordid arts of bafe lucre more beneficial to him, than his connection with me. I will now bring the teftimony of a man, to whom he made an application, and promifed, on condition that he might partake of the inheritance, to contrive a will in his favour. evidence.

What name then, judges, muft be given to this man, who fo readily, for his own profit, invents a falfity concerning the dead? This evidence too will abundantly convince you, that he produced this will, not without a compenfation, but for a ftipulated reward. Such are the artifices which they employ in concert againft me, for each of them imagines, that whatever he can filch from the poffeffions of Aftyphilus will be clear gain, and as it were a gift of fortune.

Now that the will cannot be genuine, but that Cleon and Hierocles have confpired to delude you, I have proved, as clearly as I am able; and I will proceed to demonftrate, that even had I borne no relation to the deceafed, yet our early and uninterrupted friendfhip would have given me a better claim to his inheritance, than Cleon and his fon can produce for themfelves; for when my father Theophraftus took the mother of Aftyphilus in marriage from her brother Hierocles, fhe brought her infant fon to his houfe, where he continued for a number of years, and was educated under my father's care : when, therefore, I was old enough to be capable of receiving inftruction, I went with him to the fame publick fchool, as you fhall hear from our friends, who know this to be true, and from the very mafters who inftructed us both. DEPOSITIONS.

I will alfo prove, that my father cultivated the paternal eftate of Aftyphilus, and fo confiderably improved it by plantation and tillage, that he doubled its value: let the witneffes come up. EVIDENCE.

When my brother then had proved his full age before the magiftrate, he received his whole patrimony fo juflly and regularly, that he never once made the flighteft complaint of his guardian : befides, my father had given the fifter of Aftyphilus in marriage to a man whom he highly approved; and this conduct, as well as the pains which he had taken in managing fome other affairs, gave complete fatisfaction to the young man, who thought that my father, by whom he was educated in his infancy, had afforded him the cleareft proof of his care and affection. The circumftances of his fifter's marriage fhall be proved by perfons who were perfectly acquainted with them. Witnesses.

Let me add to this, that my father conftantly took Aftyphilus, together with me, to the fhrines of his family, and even introduced him to the feafts of Hercules, as the members of that fraternity will, depofe, in order to procure his admiffion into their fociety. evidence.

Revolve now in your minds, judges, the nature of my connection with Aftyphilus: firf, we were bred together from our childhood; and fecondly, there never was the leaft coolnefs between us, but he loved me with conftant affection; as all our common friends and companions, whom I will call before you, will teftify from their own knowledge. witnesses.

Can you believe then, judges, that Aftyphilus, to whom Cleon was fo extremely odious, and on whom my father had conferred fuch benefits, would have adopted the fon of his enemy, and given his eftate away from his neareft relations and benefactors? I fhould not think it poffible, if Hierocles were to produce ten fuch wills; but fhould infift that $I$, as his brother and his deareft friend, muft have been the object of his benevolence, and not the fon of Cleon: thefe men, indeed, have not the leaft pretence for fuggefting that they were entitled to his favour, fince they had no intercourfe with him while he lived, and neglected even to inter his body, but invaded his poffeffions, before juft honours had been performed to his fhade. Neverthelefs, they have the audacity to claim his eftate, not only relying on the will, but even fetting up a title as his kinfmen, becaufe Cleon was the fon of his paternal uncle: to this argument, judges, you will pay no attention; for Cleon's father, as you before heard, was adopted by another family, and no man thus emancipated can fucceed to the property, which he has relinquifhed, unlefs he be allowed in due form of law to return into the houfe from which he came: and, as to the pretended adoption of Cleon's fon, the relations of Aftyphilus fo firmly believe it to be a fiction, that they never would admit the boy to their table in the feftival of Apaturia, but always difmiffed him when he came to demand his fhare of the feaft, as I will prove by undoubted evidence. deposition.

Now, juftly weighing in your minds what each of us has depofed, pronounce a fentence agreeable to truth. Cleon, you find, afferts, that his fon was adopted by Aftyphilus; and that the will, which he produces, was made by the deceafed: this I abfolutely deny, and alledge that I, who, as they know, am his brother, have a juft claim to the whole inheritance. Beware then, judges, of appointing an heir to Aftyphilus, whom he, when he was alive, would not have appointed ; but let the laws, which yourfelves have enacted, be your guide in my caufe:
by thofe very laws am I protected, and requeft you, judges (nor can any requeft be more facred), to eftablifh my right of fucceffion to my brother. I have afferted that he never difpofed of his eftate, and-have confirmed my affertion by unanfwerable evidence: affift me then in this diftrefs; and, if Cleon furpaffes me in the powers of elocution, let not his talents avail him in defiance of juftice and law ; but exert your own underftandings in the decifion of this caufe, fince for no other end are you affembled, than that the audacious may not reap advantage from their boldnefs, but that the timid and unexperienced may fupport their juft claims, with a full conviction that your minds are intent upon nothing but the truth. Let your verdict, therefore, judges, be favourable to me; and confider what evils will enfue from your decree in favour of Cleon: firft, you will fend to the monument, and the fhrines of Aftyphilus, thofe men who were objects of his abhorrence ; next, you will difregard the commands of his father, who gave them with his laft breath, and will convict the deceafed of confummate folly; (for who that hears fuch a decree, will not believe, that a man who could adopt the fon of his greateit enemy had loft his reafon through illnefs, or that his fenfes were impaired by poifon?) and, laftly, you will fuffer me, who was nurfed and educated with my brother, to be ftripped of my fortune by this Cleon. I fupplicate, therefore, and implore you, judges, to decide the caufe in my favour ; for thus will you give fatisfaction to the departed fpirit of Aftyphilus, and will defend me from a flagrant injury.

SPEECII THE NINTH.

THE ARGUMENT.

ARISTARCHUS having two sons, Cyronides and Demochares, and two daughters, one of whom was the mother of the complainant, emancipated Cyronides, and caused him to be appointed representative of his maternal grandfather Xeıænetus; leaving his other children to inherit his own estate. Demochares died without issue, and one of his daughters also died childless; so that the whole fortune of Aristarchus came by law to the complainant's mother, who was the surviving daughter.

After the death of Aristarchus, his brother Aristomenes, who was lawful guardian to his children, gave his own daughter in marriage to Cyronides, and engaged to support his claim to all the possessions of his father, by whom he had been emancipated. Cyronides had a son, who was named Aristarchus, and was admitted by Aristomenes to the house and property of his grandfather, as if this had been conformable to the will of the deceased. This grandson died young, having by will left the fortune to a brother of his, named Xenænetus.

While these things were transacted, and the younger Xenænetus possessed the estate of the elder Aristarchus, the son of the surviving daughter before-mentioned brought his bill of complaint, insisting that he alone ought justly to take the inheritance; that Cyronides was wholly excluded by his emancipation ; that the deceased, having a legitimate son, Demochares, could not legally have adopted another by his will ; and that Demochares himself, being under age, was disabled, as well as his sister who died, from introducing a son by adoption to their father's family: so that the admission of the younger Aristarchus to the possessions of the elder being illegal, the will of the person so admitted was invalid; since he could not transfer to another what he had not legally obtained. Iswus contends, therefore, that this last-mentioned will being set aside, the property devolves of course to the complainant, who represents the legitimate daughter of the elder Aristarchus. The speech is argumentative; and the cause turns upon the validity of such a will, and the comparative merits of both claimants.

SPEECH THE NINTH.

The Grandfon of Ariflarcbus againfo Xenanetus.

I CANNOT help wifhing, judges, that as this Xenænetus has been taught to fpeak falfely with confidence, I on my part were able to declare the truth in this caufe with equal boldnefs; for then, I am perfuaded, you would fpeedily determine, whether we are unreafonable in claiming the fortune in difpute, or they unjuft in withholding it fo long from the rightful heirs; but at prefent, judges, the conteft between us is by no means equal, fince thefe men have fuch powers in fpeaking and fuch activity in foliciting favour, that they have often been employed to manage the caufes of others ; whilft I, who have been fo far from acting for other men, that I never before have pleaded even for myfelf, can only reft my hopes on your attention and indulgence.

I was compelled, judges, when I found it impoffible to obtain redrefs without litigation, to declare on my examination before the magiftrate, that my mother was the daughter of Ariftarchus and fifter of Cyronides, and thus to enter her name on the publick tables: nor will this make it lefs eafy for you to decide the caufe ; for the fingle point, which muft be determined by law, is, Whether Ariftarchus left his own property to the defendant, or difpofed of an eftate which he had no right to poffefs? This is the true queftion; for the laws permit every one to leave his own as he pleafes, but have given no man a power to part with the poffeffions of another: if therefore you will hear me with benevolence, I will firft inform you, that this eftate belonged not originally to thefe affociates, but was my mother's patrimony; and will afterwards endeavour to convince you, that Ariftarchus occupied it by no law whatever, but, in violation of every law, confpired with his confederates to injure my mother. I will begin my narration from that period, whence you will be able to form the cleareft conception of the whole cafe.

Ariftarchus, judges, of Sypalletus married a daughter of Xenænetus the Acharnean, and by her had two fons, Cyronides and Demochares, with as many daughters, one of whom was my mother: now Cyronides, the father of the defendant, and of the other Ariftarchus, who wrongfully kept poffeffion of this eftate, was received by adoption into another family, and confequently waived all right to the fortune of that houfe, from which he was emancipated. On the death of old Ariftarchus, his fon Demochares inherited his poffeffions; but, he and his other fifter dying without iffue, my mother became fole heirefs of the family eftate; yet, although her neareft relation ought to have married her and defended her property, fhe was treated on that occafion, judges, with extreme iniquity; for, Ariftomenes the brother of Ariftarchus, having a fon and a daughter, and having the option either to take my mother himfelf, or to caufe her by an adjudication of the court to be wedded to his fon, did neither one nor the other, but gave his own daughter, together with my mother's whole fortune, to Cyronides, of whom this Xenænetus and Ariftarchus, now deceafed, were the fons. After this he was pleafed to give my mother in marriage to my father; and, Cyronides dying, the brother of Xenænetus was let into poffeffion as the adopted fon of the elder Ariftarchus, whofe name he bore: now that fuch conduct can be juftified by no law, I will prove to you, judges, by many decifive arguments ; and, firft, I will produce evidence, that Cyronides was emancipated and adopted into the family of old Xenænetus, in whofe houfe he died ; next, that Ariftarchus, the firft purchafer of this eftate, died before his fon Demochares; that Demochares and his younger fifter both died infants; and, by confequence, that the inheritance came legally to my mother. Call up the witneffes. Evidence.

This is our title, judges, to the eftate in queftion; for, Cyronides being adopted into the family of Xenænetus, it defcended from Ariftarchus to his fecond fon Demochares, and from him to my mother, who was one of his fifters : but, fince they fet no limits to their audacity, and prefume to claim our property without any colour of juftice, it is neceffary to convince you, that the younger Ariftarchus was admitted to the ward of the elder by no legal courfe whatever ; for, when you are apprized of this, you will clearly apprehend, that no man can lawfully devife an eftate, which he unlawfully poffeffed,

None of you, I believe, can be ignorant, that teftamentary adoptions are legal only when the teftator has exprefsly appointed and nominated the perfon adopted: now, if any one fhould fay, that Ariftarchus made fuch an appointment, he would fpeak untruly; for, while Demochares, his legitimate fon, was living, he neither could have the inclination, nor would he by law have the power, to adopt another ; or, if they affert, that, after the death of Ariftarchus, fuch an adoption was made by Demochares, they will again fpeak falfely; for an infant is not permitted to make a will, the law exprefsly ordaining that neither an infant nor a woman fhall do an act for the difpofal of a fum exceeding the price of one bufhel of barley: but it has been proved, that Ariftarchus died before his fon Demochares, and that he too died not long after ; fo that even on a fuppofition of their having made their wills, which they never did make, it would not have been lawful for the younger Ariftarchus to inherit thefe poffeffions. Read the laws, by which both the father and the fon are forbidden, in fimilar circumftances, to difpofe by will of their eftates. The Laws.

It is then apparent, judges, that Cyronides had no power to appoint an heir to his father; he might indeed, if he had left a fon of his own in the houfe of Xenænetus, have returned to his father's family; but, if they affert that he did return to it, they will fpeak againft truth. Thus, if they infift that any third perfon appointed the deceafed as heir to his grandfather, fuch an appointment would have been illegal ; and if they urge, that his grandfather himfelf adopted him, they will not be able to produce any law by which fuch an adoption can be juftified ; but, not to expatiate on what they may probably alledge, it will appear ftill more glaringly to you from what they actually do alledge, that they are in poffeffion of my mother's inheritance againft law and againft decency.

It is certain, that neither Arifomenes, nor his fon Apollodorus, to one of whom my mother fhould have been given in marriage, had any fuch right as that for which they contend; for it would be ftrange, when neither of thofe men, had my mother been married to one of them, could legally have difpofed of her eftate (fince the law gives the fortune of an heirefs to her fons in the fecond year after their age of puberty) if yet, when they difpofed of her to another, they might nominate an heir to her poffeffions: harfh and abfurd, indeed, would be fuch a conftruction of the law. Yet more, her own father, even had there been no male children, could not have left his eftate without her; for the law permits a man, who has no fons, to devife his property to whom he pleafes, provided that the devifee take his daughter in marriage. And fhall a man, who neither thought proper to marry her himfelf, nor bore any nearer relation to her than that of coufin, be allowed, in defiance of all laws, to appoint an heir to her fortune? Can fuch an appointment be valid? Who among you can perfuade himfelf of its validity? For my own part, judges, I am fully convinced, that neither Xenænetus, nor any other mortal, can difprove my mother's right to this eftate, which defcended to her from her brother Demochares; but, if they have the confidence to infift upon that point, command them to produce the law, by which the adoption of Ariftarchus can be fupported, and to declare who adopted him: this at leaft will be juft; but I well know that they can produce no fuch law.

Now that the property in difpute was my mother's at firft, and that fhe was unjuftly deprived of it by thefe plunderers, has been, I think, fufficientiy demonftrated by the arguments which have been adduced, the evidence which has been laid before you, and the laws which you have heard: indeed the confederates themfelves appear fo perfectly confcious of their wrongful intrufion, that they reft not their argument folely upon the legality of Ariftarchus's admiffion to the ward of his grandfather, but add, that his father had a lien upon the eftate for expenfes incurred by him in defending a fuit concerning it ; fo that, if their claim fhould be proved unjuft on the firft ground, they may feem on the fecond at leaft to have juftice on their fide. Yet that there is no truth, judges, in this affertion, I will convince you by the ftrongeft arguments; for, had the fortune been really incumbered, as they alledge, they would not have difburfed their money to pay the debt: it was not in fact their bufinefs; but thofe, who might have demanded my mother in marriage, fhould have deliberated on that affair; nor would they have appointed Ariftarchus to fuch an inheritance, from which they could have received no kind of benefit, but muft have fuftained a confiderable lofs. Moft people, indeed, when their circumftances are diftreffed, ufually emancipate their fons, and remove them to fome other family, that they may efcape the ignominy of their father's misfortune; and did thefe men difengage themfelves from their own families, and pafs by adoption into a houfe burdened with debts, that they might lofe even what before belonged to them? It cannot be : no ; the eftate was clear from incumbrances, and defcended regularly to my mother; but my adverfaries, eager for gain, have injured her, and invented thefe palpable lies to cover their ini. quity.

Some one among you, judges, may be furprized, when he reflects on the time, which we fuffered to elapfe, fince we were difpoffeffed of this eftate, without afferting our right to it in a court of judicature, and may afk why after fuch an interval we are at length induced to fet up our title: now, though I cannot but think it unjuft, that any man fhould lofe his property, if either through inability or neglect he has omitted to make his claim (for the time is not to be confidered, but the juftice of his demand), yet even for this delay, judges, we can affign a very reafonable caufe; for my father, having engaged himfelf to my mother, married her with a por-tion, and thus waived her right as heirefs; while thefe men, therefore, enjoyed the fruits of her eftate, it was not in his power to commence a fuit; and when at my mother's requeft he called them to account, they threatened to have her adjudged to them, unlefs he would be fatisfied to take her with the portion; but, rather than be deprived of her, my father would have permitted them to poffefs an eftate of twice the value, and for this reafon he neglected to prefer his complaint againft them. After this came the Corinthian war, in which both he and I were obliged to enter the field, fo that neither of us was able to attend a court ; and when peace was concluded, I had the misfortune of being a debtor to the public revenue; nor would it then have been eafy for me to have contended with fuch antagonifts: fo juft are our excufes for this delay; but it is now expedient, that my opponents fhould declare, by whofe gift Ariftarchus poffeffed the eftate, by virtue of what law he was admitted into his grandfather's ward, and for what reafon my mother was not fole heirefs of all his poffeffions. Thefe are the queftions which your fuffrages mut decide ; not, whether we afferted our title a little later than the ufual time ; and, if they are unable to difprove our right, you cannot with juftice avoid pronouncing a fentence in our favour: that they will be unable to difprove it, I am firmly perfuaded; for it is not eafy for them to contend againft both law and reafon; but they will endeavour to move your pity, by telling you in a mournful ftrain, that Ariftarchus was a brave man and perifhed in battle, whence they will take occafion to infift on the cruelty of fetting afide his teftament. I too, judges, am perfectly fenfible, that, if any man difpofes by will of his own, fuch will ought to be binding; but that no difpofition of another man's property ought in like manner to be fubftantiated : now this fortune appears to have been ours, not the teftator's; fo that, if they have recourfe to this argument, and bring evidence of Ariftarchus's will, oblige them to fhow, as juftice requires, that he legally devifed his own ; for it would be the hardent thing imaginable, if Cyronides, and thofe who claim by defcent from him, fhould not only have inherited an eftate of above four talents from old Xenænetus, but fhould alfo feize this additional inheritance, whilft I, who am defcended from the fame common anceftor with Cyronides, am deprived of my mother's fortune, to which fhe had an indifputable right, efpecially when they cannot fhow in themfelves even a colourable title: yet, as every poffeffor of an eftate, whofe right is contefted, muft declare who was the mortgagor or vendor of it, or prove that he recovered it by a decree of the court, fo fhould thefe men, judges, have entitled themfelves to your verdict, by fhowing in what manner their right accrued, and not by ejecting my mother before any trial from her paternal inheritance.

I fufpect indeed, that this Xenrnetus is not fatisfied with having lavifhed the wealth of Ariftomenes in his unnatural exceffes, but wifhes to fpend my fortune alfo with the fame difgraceful profufion; whilft I, judges, with a contracted income, having given my fifter in marriage with as large a portion as I could afford ; and, confcious of having conducted myfelf with decency, complied with the laws of my country, and ferved in its wars, have applied to this tribunal, that I may not be wholly ftripped of my poffeffions.

To recapitulate the whole: I have proved that Cyronides, the father of thefe men, was emancipated and removed into another family, from which he never returned, that the father of Cyronides and of my mother let this eftate defcend to his fon Demochares, and that, he dying childlefs, it devolved upon my mother.

SPEECH THE TENTH.

ON THE ESTATE OF HAGNIAS。

THE ARGUMENT.

AN attentive inspection of the annexed pedigree will give a clearer idea of this interesting cause, than can be conveyed by words: it will there be seen that Stratius and the elder Hagnias were brothers, Charidemus and Polemo first cousins; and that HAGNIAS, whose estate is in question, was second cousin both to Stratocles, whose son is the complainant, and to Theopompus, whom Isæus defends.

On the death of HAGNIAS, first his niece, and then his half-brother Glauco, took possession of his effects, on pretence that the deceased had left them by will to his niece, with a'remainder to Glauco; but Philomache, the daughter of his cousin Eubulides, proved the will to be forged, and obtained a decree for the estate. Theopompus then disputed the title of Philomache, and the former decree was reversed in his favour; but the son of Stratocles, who was in ward to Theopompus, claimed a moiety of the estate, alledging, that he had an equal right with his uncle. This was not a private suit, but a public prosecution, or information, against a guardian for injuring his ward.

SPEECH THE TENTH.

Theopompus araing the Son of Stratocles.
I BEGIN my defence, judges, with a recital of the laws, becaufe my adverfary has falfely contended that, by the firft of them, the fon of Stratocles has a juft claim to a moiety of this eftate which was left by my fecond coufin Hagnias. You will obferve that, when a man dies inteftate and childlefs, the law firft calls to the fucceffion the brothers of the deceafed, if he had any by the fame father, and the children of thofe brothers, for they are related to him in the neareft degree; if he had no brothers, his fifters by the fame father, and their children, are his fucceffors; on failure of thefe alfo, thofe in the third degree are called, and they are the firt and fecond coufins of the deceafed by the father's fide : if thefe too fail, the law returns to the firft degree, and gives the inheritance to the brothers or fifters by the fame mother, and to the other kinfmen on the maternal fide, in order as thofe on the paternal fide would have inherited. The legiflator prefcribes thefe rules of fucceffion, and limits thefe degrees in terms more concife than thofe which I ufe; but his intention is clearly the fame: now this boy is not related to Hagnias in one of thefe degrees, but is wholly excluded; and, that you may form a diftinct idea of the point which you muft decide, let my antagonift fhow, without fuperfluous words, in which of the degrees juft mentioned the boy is related to the laft owner of this eftate ; for, if he can prove his relationthip in any one of them, I willingly allow that half of the inheritance belongs to him ; but, if nothing of this kind can be fhown, will he not clearly convict himfelf of having calumniated me, and attempted to delude you in defiance of the law? I will, therefore, bring him up to your tribunal, and interrogate him, as the heads of the law are read by the officer; for thus will you foon be informed, whether, or no, this youth has any claim to the fortune of Hagnias.

Come, thou who art fo fkilful in accufing others, and in perverting the laws; and do you (to the clerk) take the law and read. THE LAW.

There ftop.-Now let me propofe a few queftions to my adverfary: Is the boy, whom you fupport, the brother of Hagnias? No.-Or his nephew either by his brother or his fifter? No. - Or his firft or fecond coufin either on his father's fide or on his mother's? In which of thofe degrees, I fay, that are legally called to the fucceffion, was he related to the deceafed ?-Anfwer me not that he is my nephew ; for my eftate is not now in difpute, as I am living; but had I died childlefs, and had there been a fuit concerning my property, then would fuch an anfwer have been proper. You now pretend, that the fon of Stratocles has a right to a moiety of this eftate; it is therefore incumbent on you to name the degree, in which the claimant was related to Hagnias. His anfwers, judges, are foreign to the purpofe, and apply to every thing but that which you wifh to know : yet a man, who intends to do juftice, ought not to hefitate, but to fpeak directly, and not only to anfwer with candour, but upon oath, and to produce evidence of the fact which he afferts, that you may the more readily believe his affertion ; but now fo fhamelefs is his impudence, that, without giving one explicit anfwer, without calling a fingle witnefs, without taking an oath, without citing any laws, he has hopes of perfuading you to convict me, againft all law, in a caufe which you are fwo:n to decide according to the laws of your country. In this moft iniquitous way of proceeding I will by no means imitate him, but will openly evince my relation to the deceafed, will explain the grounds on which I claim his eftate, and will demonftrate to your general fatisfaction, that both this boy, and all thofe who have before contended againft me for the fame property, are utterly excluded from the limits of fucceffion: but it will be neceffary to relate from the beginning what has happened in our family, that you may diftinctly perceive the weaknefs of their claim, and the folidity of mine.

Myfelf and Hagnias, judges, and Eubulides, and Stratocles, and Stratius, whofe firter was the mother of Hagnias, were the children of three firft coufins; for our fathers were the fons of as many brothers: now Hagnias, when he was preparing to embark on an embaffy concerning fome affairs of great advantage to the ftate, made his will, in which, inftead of leaving his fortune, in cafe of any accident, to us his neareft relations, he appointed his niece to be his heirefs, and ordered that, on her deceafe, his eftate fhould go to Glauco, his half-brother. Some time after his death, both Eubulides died, and the niece whom Hagnias had adopted; upon which Glauco took poffeffion of the inheritance by virtue of the limitation to him ; nor did we then conceive it juft to conteft the validity of the will, but candidly acquiefced in it, and thought that the intention of the deceafed ought to be effectuated: yet Phylomache, the daughter of Eubulides, affifted by her confederates, claimed the eftate, and by furprize obtained a fentence in her favour againft the claimants under the will, although fhe was not in the regular line of fucceffion; but the hoped, it feems, that we would not oppofe her, as we had not difputed the teftament of Hagnias: we, however (I mean Stratius and Stratocles and myfelf) perceiving that the inheritance was now open to the next of kin, were preparing to inftitute a fuit: but, before our claim could be regularly and formally made, both Stratocles and Stratius died, leaving me the only furviving fecond coufin of Hagnias, to whom the law gives the right of fucceffion, after the death of all thofe who ftood in the fame degree of confanguinity. Who will prove to you, that I am thus entitled to the eftate, and that the children of my brothers, of whom this boy is one, are entirely excluded? The law itfelf; for it is confeffed on all fides that the inheritance goes to the fecond coufins on the father's fide, but whether it can defcend to the children of thofe coufins, is now to be confidered. Take the law, and read it to the jury. THE LAW. But if there be no kinfmen on the father's fide fo near as the fecond coufins, then let thofe on the mother's fide fucceed to the eftate in the fame order.

You muft remark, judges, that the legillator hath not faid, if there be no nearer kinfmen on the father's fide, let the children of the fecond cou-fins have the eftate, but has given it, on failure of relations in the fame degree with my brother and me, to thofe on the maternal fide, to the brothers or fifters and their children, and fo to the reft, as it has been before obferved, whilft our children are completely barred from claiming any fhare: fince then, had I been dead, the law would not have called them to the fucceffion, how can they conceive, that, whilft I am living and legally poffeffed of the property, they can have any title to the inheritance? It cannot be: fince the others, therefore, whofe fathers were in the fame degree with me, have not the fhadow of a title, no more has this boy, whofe father Stratocles was my brother. It is then moft abominably iniquitous in my adverfaries, when the laws have fo explicitly given me the fucceffion, and fo manifeftly excluded all others, to load me with calumny; and, when I put in my claim, neither to controvert my right, nor to give pledges of proving their own (although that was the time for contending with me, had juftice been on their fide): but now to harafs me in the boy's name, and expofe me by a publick profecution to the greatef of all dangers, and, without accufing me of having embezzled the property, which belongs confeffedly to my ward, and which, if I had unjufly or difhoneftly lavifhed, as they have done, I fhould have deferved this rigour; without pretending, I fay, to bring any fuch charge, to attack me with fo much violence for an eftate, which you, judges, having permitted any one who pleafed to litigate my claim, decided folemnly to be mine, is an excefs of audacious iniquity.

What has already been urged, judges, has, I believe, convinced you, that I neither injure this boy in any refpect, nor am in the leaft degree guilty of the crimes which they impute to me; but I think you will be able to form a more accurate judgement, when you have heard in what manner I claimed this eftate, and for what reafons my claim was determined to be juft. At the time, judges, when I began the fuit, neither did my prefent accufer think proper to give pledges of fupporting the title of this youth, nor had the children of Stratius, who ftand in the fame degree with him, any idea of oppofing me, but all imagined that my right was on no pretence to be difputed; nor would this very man have now molefted me, if I had fuffered him to perfift in plundering the boy's effects at his pleafure, and had not given a timely check to his rapacioufnefs: this part then of the family, as I juft informed you, being perfuaded that they were not in the order of fucceffion, remained inactive ; but the agents of Phylomache, the daughter of Eubulides, who was in an equal degree with the fon of Stratius, together with thofe to whofe care the mother of Hagnias was committed, had the boldnefs to contend with me; yet fo uncertain were they what title to fet forth in their bill of complaint, that Phylomache, who was in poffeffion of the eftate, and the advocates, who fupported her claim, not daring to difclofe the truth, and having afferted a palpable falfity, were eafily confuted by me; while the fupporters of Hagnias's mother, who, being the fifter of Stratius, was in the fame degree with myfelf, but was excluded by the law, which gives a preference to males, waived that part of her pretended title, and, thinking to overpower me with their arguments, infifted that fhe was the mother of the deceafed; a relation, I admit, the nearef of all by nature, but not recognifed by law among the degrees of fucceffion: having therefore proved myfelf to be a fecond coufin, and having fhown the claims of thefe two women to be groundlefs, I obtained your decree; nor did it avail the firft of them to have triumphed over thofe who relied on the will, nor the fecond, to have given birth to the laft poffeffor of the eftate ; but fo high a value did the juries fet both on their oaths and on juftice, that they eftablifhed by their fuffrages the legality of my title. If then I prevailed in this manner againft thefe female claimants, by demonftrating that they could not legally fucceed, if this falfe accufer durft not at that time claim a moiety of the inheritance for the fon of Stratocles, if the children of Stratius, who ftand on the fame ground with him, do not even now think it juft to conteft my right, if I am in poffeffion of the lands and money by virtue of your fentence, and if I prove that my adverfary cannot now fhow in what legal degree the boy was related to Hagnias, what elfe, judges, have you to learn? What further can you defire to hear in this caufe? I perfuade myfelf, that what has been faid will be fully fufficient for men of your folid underftanding. Yet this calumniator, who fcruples not to circulate whatever his malignity can fuggeft, and flatters himfelf that his iniquity will continue uncenfured, had the confidence to accufe me of many bad actions (for which defamation I fhall, perhaps, call him to account), and particularly of having made a bargain with Stratocles, when we were preparing our fuit, concerning a partition of the inheritance ; a bargain which we alone, of all perfons who were going to law, could not poffibly have made: the daughter of Eubulides, indeed, and the mother of Hagnias, who claimed by two diftinct titles, might have agreed, when they thought proper to oppofe me, that whoever was fuccefsful fhould refign a fhare to the other, for a feparate urn was placed on the ballot for each of them ; but our cafe was totally different; for as our title was precifely the fame, although each of us claimed a moiety, a fingle urn would have ferved for us both, fo that it was impoffible for one to fucceed and the other to fail, fince the danger was common to both of us: no agreement then of this nature could have been made by us; but, when Stratocles, before we had put in our refpective claims, was prevented by death from profecuting his fuit, and his fon was difabled by the law from renewing it, fo that the whole fucceffion devolved upon me as latt in order, and it became neceffary to evict the wrongful poffeffors of the eftate, my accufer invented this idle calumny, expecting eafily to delude you by his falfe pretences. That no fuch compact, indeed, could have been made to any purpofe, but that the fixed and regular courfe of proceeding wholly prevented it, the law itfelf will evince; which take and read to the court. the Law. Does this law feem to have put it in our power to make fuch a compromife? Does it not render it impracticable, even if an agreement had been idly formed, by ordaining exprefsly that each party litigant fhall fue for his diftinct portion, but that a fingle urn fhall ferve for thofe who claim under the fame title, and that all fuch caufes fhall be conducted in a fimilar manner? Yet has this man, not regarding the pofitive direction of the law, not confidering the impoffibility of fuch a fcheme, had the boldnefs to make this heavy charge againft me without either truth or reafon; nor has he been contented with this, but has afferted the moft inconfiftent things imaginable, to which, judges, I requeft your ferious attention.

He avers, that I engaged to give the boy a moiety of the eftate, if I prevailed over thofe who were in poffeffion of it ; yet, if he had a right to fuch a portion, by nearnefs of blood, as my adverfary pretends, what occafion was there for fuch a promife on my part? If they fpeak truly, he had an equal power with me of exhibiting a bill for his moiety; and, if he had no kind of title as next of kin, what could poffibly have induced me to make fuch an engagement, when the law clearly gave me the whole eftate? Could not I have put in my claim without obtaining their confent? This they cannot fay; for the law permits any man to claim a vacant inheritance. Had they any evidence then of my title, by fuppreffing which they might have prevented a decree in my favour? No fuch evidence was neceffary, as I claimed by defcent and not under a will. If it was impofible, therefore, for Stratocles, while he lived, to make any compromife with me, if he could not leave any part of thefe effects to his fon, as he had no decree, and the property never vefted in him, if it is highly improbable, that I fhould have promifed to give the boy a moiety, let your verdict on this day fubftantiate my juft claim to the whole ; and, if thefe confederates never inftituted a fuit for this eftate, nor ever thought proper to contend againft me, can you poffibly give credit to their allegations? I think you cannot: but as you may reafonably be furprized, that they neglected at that time to demand their moiety, my opponent afferts, that my promife of refigning a fhare prevented them from attacking the other parties, and that they could not legally enter into a conteft with me, becaufe an orphan cannot bring an action againft his guardian ; both which affertions are falfe; for neither can they produce a law, which would have precluded my ward from afferting his claims (fince the laws would by no means have reftrained him, but, as they allow a criminal profecution againft me, fo they give both me and him a mutual right of maintaining civil actions), nor were they deterred from litigating the title of others by any promife of mine, but folely by their confcioufnefs that no part of the inheritance juftly belonged to them; and I am fully perfuaded, that, had I even fuffered the boy to obtain judgement againtt me for a moiety, his advocates and friends would not have attempted to take poffeffion of it, nor would they have permitted him to poffefs it, being perfectly aware of the danger; fince, as they would have taken an eftate without being in the legal order of fucceffion, thofe in a nearer degree might inftantly have applied to the court, and would infallibly have evicted them; for, as I began with obferving, the law wholly excludes from the inheritance the fons of relations in the fame degree with me, and, if our degree fails, it calls to the fucceffion thofe on the mother's fide; fo that Glauco, the half-brother of Hagnias, might have contended with them for the eftate, in which contention they would have been fo far from producing a better title, that they could have produced no title at all ; or if Glauco had relinquifhed his claim, the mother of him and of Hagnias might then have juftly entered into litigation for the property of her fon; and, as fhe would have difputed with perions by no means admiffible to the fucceffion, fhe would clearly have obtained your fentence for the moiety, both law and natural juftice confpiring in her favour. It is apparent, therefore, that my accufer was not prevented from fupporting the boy's demand either by my undertaking or by any law whatever; but, having by falfe pretexts and iniquitous calumnies contrived this information, and now having opened his pretended charge againft me, he has hopes of removing me from the guardian fhip and of transferring it to bimfelf; imagining, that by this contrivance he fhows his art and dexterity, fince, if he fails of fuccefs, he will fuftain no lofs, and, if he attains the object of his machinations, he will diffipate with fafety the poffeffions of this youth: you will not then liften to the allegations of my adverfary, nor encourage the practice of profecuting criminally, when the laws have provided a remedy by a civil action. So perfectly fimple and fo intelligible is the juftice of my cafe : I will, therefore, in few words, recapitulate the heads of it, and having, as it were, depofited them in your memory, will afterwards proceed to the other part of my defence againft the remaining articles of acculation.

What then is the real equity of my caufe, and how fhall I define it? This it clearly is: if my opponent avers, that the youth, from his relation to Hagnias, has a right to a moiety of his eftate, let him fue for it in the court of the Archon; and if you there decide in his favour, let him, as the laws direct, take what he demands; but, if he abandons this claim, and infifts upon my promife to divide the property, which I abfolutely deny, let him bring his action; and if he can prove any fuch undertaking on my part, let him, as juftice requires, have poffeffion of his ftipulated fhare: again, if he alledges that my ward could not legally controvert my right or fupport an action againft me, let him cite the law, which reftrains him, and if he can fairly produce it, let him on that ground obtain a verdict for his moiety. Yet farther, if he urges that it was neither competent to claim half the eftate, nor to bring an action on the fuppofed promife, but that he has, neverthelefs, a legal title, let him petition the Archon, to make a leafe of the poffeffions in difpute, and let the leffee demand a moiety from me as belonging to the fon of Stratocles. It would have been confonant to juftice, and agreeable to the directions of the law, to have followed any one of thefe methods; but it is neither juft nor legal to harafs me with a publick profecution, when a private action was maintainable; and to expofe even my perfon to danger, becaufe I will not refign to this boy the property which I recovered by your fuffrages from thofe who unjuftly poffeffed it: had I, indeed, managed any of thofe effects, which are indifputably his, with difhonefty and to his detriment, then would an information againt me have been juftifiable ; but not when I am guilty of no other crime than a refolution to keep my own eftate.

Now, that my antagonift has not acted jufly in any one of thefe inftances, that he has not fpoken truth on any of the other points, but has fabricated this accufation from fordid motives of intereft, warping the laws to his own fenfe, and endeavouring to circumvent both you and me againft equity and reafon, I think, by all the Gods, that none of you can be ignorant ; fo that all further arguments on this head feem unneceffary.

I obferve, judges, that my adverfary principally dwells in his charge on a comparifon of the boy's fortune with mine, and reprefents his circumftances as extremely narrow, but expatiates on the imaginary wealth, which he beftows on me; accufing me at the fame time of fuch avarice, that, although Stratocles left four daughters, I have not given a portion to any of them, even whilft I am in poffeffion, as he afferts, of their brother's eftate: this allegation I think it proper to refute; for he hopes, by his flourifhing haiangue, to raife your envy of me on account of my accumulated riches, and to excite your compaffion for the children of my brother by deploring their pretended indigence. Of thefe facts, therefore, you muft not be ignorant, but fhall hear an exact fate of them, which will convince you, that my accufer fpeaks falfely on this head, as he has fpoken on all the others ; for 1 fhould acknowledge myfelf to be the bafeft of mortals, if Stratocles had died in want, and I being wealthy had taken no care of his children; but if he left them a fortune both more ample and more fecure than my own, fo ample, indeed, that the girls were married with handfome portions, and the boy was made rich with what remained, if I have fo diligently managed their affairs, as to raife their eftate confiderably, I cannot juftly incur any cenfure for not refigning my own property to augment theirs, but rather deferve commendation for my prudence and induftry: that all this is true, I can eafily demonftrate; and, firft, I will apprize you of our refpective fortunes, after which I will fhow in what manner I have regulated the concerns of my nephew.

The patrimony of Stratocles and myfelf was fuch as might content us, but not fufficient to defray the expence of public offices: what proves it is, that neither of us received more than twenty minas with our wives, and fo fmall a portion is not ufually given to men of affluent fortunes; but it happened, that Stratocles had the addition of two talents and a half to his paternal inheritance; for Theophon, his wife's brother, died, having adopted one of his daughters, to whom he gave a farm in the diftrict of Eleufis worth two talents, together with fixty fheep, an hundred goats, his houfehold furniture, a fine horfe on which he rode when he commanded a troop, and all his other effects; of which Stratocles having enjoyed the profits for nine whole years, left a fortune of five talents and a half, including his patrimony, but exclufively of what Theophon had given to his daughter. His eftate was this: a farm at Thrix, worth two talents and a half: a houfe at Melite, which has been fold for half a talent, and another in Eleufis, worth five minas ; fuch was the real eftate of Stratocles, and thefe were the yearly rents of it ; of the farm, twelve minas; of the houfes, three : he had, befides, forty minas, out at intereft, which, at the rate of nine obolus's a month for every mina, bring in annually feven minas and twenty drachmas; his whole income, therefore, was more than twentytwo minas. In addition to thefe he left furniture, fheep, corn, wine, fruit ; all which have been fold for forty minas: he had alfo nine minas in money; and to them we may add his debts, which were called in, to the amount of near ten minas, and which the widow of Stratocles acknowledged before witneffes to be the boy's property. I fay nothing of the other effects which he left and which they conceal ; but I fpeak only of what appears, and what they are willing to admit. Call the witneffes to all thefe facts. witnesses.

Such was the fortune of Stratocles, and even larger than this; but I fhall have fome other occafion to call them to account for the goods, which they have embezzled. Now what is my prefent eftate? A farm in EEnea worth only fifty minas, and the inheritance of Hagnias amounting to two talents and fifty minas, which fums together are lefs by one hundred and ten minas than the fortune of this youth: in this calculation too I have comprized the effects of my fon, whom I emancipated, but have not added to the oppofite fide the property which Theophon left his daughter by adoption, and which may fairly be valued at two talents and a half; with that addition, which however I have not made, their eftate will amount to eight talents. Moreover, the inheritance of Hagnias is not yet well fecured to me, fince fome actions brought againft the witneffes for perjury will make it neceffary for me to obtain a fecond adjudication; but Stratocles left his poffeffions to his fon uncontroverted and incontrovertible. Now let thefe depofitions be read, to prove that my effects, together with thofe of my fon, amount to no more than what I have mentioned, and that actions are depending againft fome witneffes in the caufe concerning the eftate of Hagnias. depositions.

Is the difference then trifling between our refpective fortunes? Or rather, is it not fo great, that mine appears almoft as nothing in comparifon of that which was left to the children of Stratocles? You cannot therefore give credit to the affertions of this man, who, although the boy has a flourifhing eftate of his own, has ventured to prefer fo violent and fo groundlefs a charge againft me, and infifts on three eftates, which he fuppofes me to have inherited, together with the vaft wealth which I have amaffed; all which, he fays, I have fecreted, that the publick may reap no advantage from my opulence. Such are the calumnies, which men, who have nothing equitable to alledge, are forced to invent, that they may confound the innocent with the boldnefs of their accufations! You will all, however, teftify for me, that my wife's two brothers, Chæreleos and Macartatus, were not in the rank of thofe who bear expenfive offices, but were in circumftances extremely contracted; you know, that Macartatus, having fold his farm, bought a galley, which he armed, and failed in it to Crete; nor was this a private act, but of fuch notoriety, that it was mentioned in the affembly of the people, where fome were apprehenfive that the Lacedæmonias would confider fuch an expedition as a breach of the peace, and would confequently renew hoftilities. Chæreleos, indeed, left an eftate in Profpalta, not worth more than half a talent, and died before Macartatus, who foon afterwards perifhed in battle, where the veffel and all the goods, with which he had embarked, were taken. When the Profpaltian farm became the property of my wife, fhe perfuaded me to emancipate one of my fons, that he might continue the name and preferve the family of her deceafed brother Macartatus; not that my parting with that eftate might exempt me from ferving publick offices, for that made no difference, as I had ferved before it came to me, and was among the readieft to join in contributions, and to perform all the duties which you required of me; fo that this informer moft falfely charges me with being an ufelefs, yet an opulent, citizen.

To conclude: I will fum up the whole caufe in one word by a propofal, which you will allow, I am perfuaded, to be juft: I offer to bring my whole eftate, large or fmall, into hotchpot with that of my ward, and when they are mixed together, let each of us fairly take a moiety of the aggregate value, fo that neither of us may poffefs more than the other; but to this, I know, my adverfary will never confent.

FRAGMENTS OF ISEUS.

I.

From a Speech for Euphiletus against the Burgesses of Erchia.

THE ARGUMENT.

THE law, by which every borough in Attica was commanded to make a review of its members, and to reject all such as were not genuine citizens, gave the rejected a power of appealing to the courts of justice at Athens; but ordained, that, if the appellants failed in proving their right, they should be sold for slaves, and their property confiscated.

EUPHILETUS, the son of Hegesippus, had been disfranchised by the Erchians, in consequence of some private quarrel; and the dispute was at first referred to two arbitrators, who made an award in his favour; but, as the burgesses persisted in their refusal to admit him, he was not deterred by the rigour of the law from bringing his appeal. Isæus, who composed the speech for one of the appellant's brothers, began with an exact narrative of the whole transaction, and, having called witnesses in confirmation of it, supported their credibility with the following judicious observations.

FRAGMENTS.

THAT Euphiletus, judges, is really our brother by the fame father, you have heard proved by the teftimony not of us only, but of all our kinfmen. Now confider firft what could have induced our father to invent a falfity, and to take by adoption a fon, whom he had not by nature ; for you will find, that all adoptions are made by men, who either have no children lawfully born, or are compelled by their poverty to adopt fome wealthy foreigners, from whom they expect a pecuniary acknowledgment for the benefit conferred on them by making them citizens of Athens: but our father had neither of thefe motives ; for we two are his legitimate fons, fo that he could not have been in want of an heir; nor had he any need of fupport from this adopted fon, fince he poffeffed a handfome competence of his own ; and it has, moreover, been proved to you, that he maintained Euphiletus from his infancy, conducted his education, and introduced him to the members of his ward, of all which the expenfes are by no means inconfiderable. It cannot then be thought probable, judges, that my father would have acted fo unjuftly without any profpect of advantage: ftill lefs can any mortal fuppofe me to be capable of fuch confummate folly, as to give falfe evidence in favour of another man, in order to make my patrimony diftributable among a greater number; for I fhould preclude myfelf from the power of contending on a future occafion that he was not my brother; nor would any of you endure even the found of my voice, if, having taken a part in the prefent litigation, and given in evidence my nearnefs of blood to the appellant, I fhould afterwards attempt to contradict my own teftimony. It is reafonable too, judges, for you to believe, that not only we, but all his other kinfmen, have fpoken conformably to the truth; for you will firft obferve, that thofe who married our fifters, would never have fworn falfely in his favour; fince their wives are only the daughters-in-law of his mother, and ftep-mothers are in general apt to be at variance with the children of their hufbands; fo that, even had Euphiletus been the child of any other man than our father, it is not to be imagined, that our fifters would have defired their own hufbands to be witneffes for the fon of their ftep-mother : confider alfo, that the next witnefs, our maternal uncle, but in no degree related to the appellant, would never have gratified His mother by making a depofition, not only falfe, but, if Euphiletus had indeed been a foreigner, manifeftly injurious to his own nephews.

Yet more:-Who among you, judges, can fuppofe Demaratus, and Hegemon, and Nicoftratus, to be guilty of perjury; men, who, in the firft place, will be found unblemifhed with any bad imputation, and who, moreover, being intimately connected with us, and perfectly acquainted with our family, have refpectively acknowledged upon oath the relation which they bear to Euphiletus? I would gladly, therefore, afk even the moft refpectable of our opponents, by what other mode he could prove himfelf to be a citizen of Athens, unlefs by that which we have ufed in evincing the right of the appellant; for I cannot conceive, that he could fuggeft any other method, than to fhow that both his father and his mother were citizens, and to adduce the 'teftimony of his kinfmen in fupport of his allegations. Were our adverfaries, indeed, expofed to the danger of lofing their own franchifes, they would think it juft, that you fhould attend to the depofitions of their friends and relations, rather than to the defamatory charges of their accufers ; and now, when we give evidence exactly fimilar to that which they would have given for themfelves, fhall they perfuade you to be deluded by their pretences, inftead of believing the father of Euphiletus, myfelf, and my brother, the members of our ward, and all our kindred; efpecially fince the burgeffes are in no dangerous fituation, but keep up this conteft to gratify their private refentment ; while we, who bear witnefs in the caufe of our friend, are liable to animadverfion, if we fpeak falfely, in a court of juftice?

To thefe arguments, judges, I muft add, that Euphiletus's mother, whom our antagonifts allow to be a citizen, was ready to make oath before the two arbitrators in the Delphinian temple, that Euphiletus was the fon of her and of our father; and who could poffibly know this more furely than herfelf? Our father too, judges, who, next to her, muft be fuppofed to have the moft certain knowledge of his own fon, both defired at that time, and defires now, to fwear, that Euphiletus was his child by an Athenian citizen, whom he had lawfully married. Myfelf alfo, judges, who was juft thirteen years old, as I before informed you, when the appellant was born, am ready again to depofe that this Euphiletus is actually my half-brother. You will juftly therefore be of opinion, that our oaths deferve greater credit than the bare affertions of our opponents; for we, with a perfect knowledge of the truth, are defirous of declaring it in favour of our kinfman, while they fpeak only what they have heard from his enemies, or rather what they have themfelves invented: we too, judges, both laid before the arbitrators, and now lay before you, the teftimony of his relations, who cannot be reafonably difbelieved; while they, when Euphiletus preferred his former complaint, as well againft the burgeffes of Erchia as againft the mayor, who is fince dead, and when the matter had been two years in a courfe of arbitration, were never able to produce a fingle witnefs of his being the fon of any other man than of Hegefippus, which appeared fo ftrong a mark of their falfe pretenfions, that both arbitrators were unanimous in condemning them. Read now the proof of the former conteft, and the event of it. Evidence.

You have heard it proved, judges, that the award was unfavourable to our adverfaries; and, as they would have relied on a contrary determination as a decifive argument, that our friend was not the fon of Hegefippus, fo we may fairly rely, as an argument no lefs decifive in his favour, on the determination, that the name of an Athenian had been injurioufly expunged from the roll of his borough, in which it had firft been properly infcribed. On the whole, you have heard, I am convinced, very fufficient proof, that Euphiletus is really our brother and your fellow-citizen, and that he has been rejected with unjuft indignity by the burgeffes of Erchia.

From a Speech for Eumathes.

THE ARGUMENT.

A slave, named Eumathes, had been regularly manumitted by Epigenes his master, and had opened a banker's house at Athens, where he resided in the capacity of a freed man, till Dionysius, his master's heir, claimed him as part of his estate, insisting either that there had been no manumission, or that it was irregular and void. This claim was opposed by a citizen who patronized Eumathes, and employed Isæus to compose his defence, of which all but the opening is unfortunately lost.

On a former occafion, judges, I gave my affiftance, with good reafon, to the defendant Eumathes, and will now endeavour, as far as I am able, to co-operate with you in preferving him from ruin ; but, left any of you fhould imagine, that a forward petulance or ill-defigned officioufnefs have induced me to intereft myfelf in his affairs, I intreat you to hear a fhort explanation of my conduct. When I commanded a galley in the archonfhip of Cephifodotus, and a ftrong report of my death in a naval engagement had reached the ears of my friends, Eumathes, with whom I had depofited fome valuable effects, called together my relations, to whom he difcovered the depofit, and refigned my property to them with the moft rigorous exactnefs: in return for this honeft behaviour, when I was wholly out of danger, I cultivated a ftricter friendfhip with him, and, when he fet up his bank, advanced him a fum of money to increafe his capital; and afterwards, when Dionyfius claimed him as a flave, I prepared to affert his liberty, having pofitive knowledge, that Epigenes had enfranchifed him in open court.

III.

From a Defence of a Guardian againgt his Ward.
I SHOULD have been happy, judges, not only if I had efcaped the fcandalous imputations of laying fnares for the property of others, and inftituting fuits with that view (imputations, which I am fo perfectly confcious of having never deferved), but alfo, if my nephew, inftead of grafping at my eftate, would have taken due care of his own paternal fortune, which we juftly furrendered to him, a fortune not inconfiderable, but ample enough to fuftain the burden of the moft expenfive offices; for then he would have been efteemed by all as a worthier man, while, by preferving and increafing his patrimony, he would have proved himfelf a ufeful citizen ; but, fince he has aliened part of it, and confumed the reft in a manner that gives me pain; fince, relying on the number of his affociates and the preconcerted quirks of his advocates, he has invaded my poffeffions, I cannot but confider it as a misfortune, that a kinfman of mine fhould act fo difgracefully, and I muft enter upon my defence, with all the activity in my power, againft his direct accufation and the impertinent calumnies which accompanied it.

Now this is the plan which I have followed; that the truth may be juftly extorted from the flaves; while my adverfary, like a man defirous only of circumventing, has recourfe to invectives and idle fophifms: were he willing, indeed, to obtain juftice, inftead of feeking to baffle and delude your minds, he would not act in this manner, but would come to a fair account, bring his own proofs, and thus interrogate me to every diftinct article in my bill. How many taxes have you reckoned? So many, I fhould have anfwered, or fo many. To what fum do they amount? To fo much or fo much. By what decrees of the people were they exacted? By thefe in my hand. Who received the money? Thefe witneffes, who will fwear to their receipt of it. He ought next to have examined minutely the number of the contributions, the fums paid, the decrees, the receivers; and, if all appeared juft, to have allowed my account; if not, to have proved what falfity or unfairnefs he could find in it.

IV.

From a Speech againft the Members of bis Borough, concerning a Farm.

I SHOULD principally have defired, judges, to have fuftained no injury at all from any citizen whatever; and next, if an injury were inevitable, to have fuftained it from adverfaries, whom I might bring to juftice without concern; but I now find myfelf reduced to a moft afflicting alternative; for I am injured by my fellow burgeffes, whofe invafion of my property it is not eafy to pafs over without complaint, and whofe attacks it is unpleafant to repel with animofity, fince neceffity obliges me to meet them often on occafions of publick bufinefs. It is difficult alfo to contend with many antagonifts, whofe number alone has a confiderable effect in giving them the appearance of fpeaking truth; yet, relying on the merits of my cafe, and having fuffered many enormous hardfhips, I conceived that I fhould no longer decline attempting to obtain redrefs by your fentence: give me therefore your indulgence, if, young as I am, I have ventured to open my lips in a court of judicature; for the fenfe of my wrongs compels me in this inftance to depart from my former habits of referve; and I thall now endeavour to apprize you of the whole tranfaction, relating it from the beginning as concifely as I am able.

From a Speech in an Action of Debt．

THis moft abandoned of men，without pro－ ducing thofe witneffes，before whom he afferts the money to have been paid，affects to think it juft，that you fhould give greater credit to them， who alledge that it was reftored，than to us who deny that we have ever received it ；yet it is well known，I believe to all，that，as in the flou－ rifhing ftate of their father＇s fortunes，they would not have difcharged the debt without compulfion，fo after his difgrace and total ruin we could not even have compelled them to dif－ charge it．

NOTES ON ISÆUS.

PAGE 75. -of which they boldly affert that he was a creditor.] A flight variation in the text would make it neceffary to alter the tranflation of this paffage; and, inftead of the words above cited, to read-" which they affert that he had encumbered with debts:" it feems, however, more probable, that the devifees pretended to have a lien on the paternal eftate of the young men for fome money due to the deceafed, than that Cleonymus fhould have mortgaged the property of his nephews, which we can hardly fuppofe that he had a power of doing.
76. Polyarchus] Reifke has fubftituted Poliarchus, ruling the city, inftead of Polyarchus, with extenfive fway; but the firft proper name appears to be unfupported by analogy, and the fecond ftands foremoft in the lift, which Xenophon has given us, of the thirty tyrants.
77. Cleonymus himfelf, when he recovered from that illnefs, in which he made his will, declared, that he wrote it in anger.] The conftruction, which Taylor propofed, and which Reifke thought unintelligible, feems to convey a clear and obvious meaning, as I have rendered it.
80. When one of the proper officers came to the door] The text has Archonides, a proper name, which I cannot help fufpecting, as the Archon is mentioned a few lines before; and the fimilarity of found might have mifled the tranfcriber.
82. - one of the two molt oppofite things ] I have fupplied a chafm in the original, as well as I was able, and have given the paffage a tolerable fenfe. Taylor fuppofes this fpeech to be very imperfect, and imagines that half of it is loft, becaufe the names of Pherenicus and Simo, who are not mentioned in the oration, occur in the argument; but it muft be obferved, once for all, that the Greek arguments are for the moft part erroneous, and feem to have been written by fome very ignorant grammarian.
84. -the Cyprian] Not a native of the ifland Cyprus, but member of a borough in Attica fo named. Reifke.
-poffeffed of three talents ] I ufed to valuc the Attick talent, on the authority of Arbuthnot, at 1931. I 5 s. and to think it confiderably underrated by Tourreil and Prideanx ; but my friend Mr. Combe, whofe knowledge of ancient coins is no lefs exact than extenfive, has convinced me that Arbuthnot himfelf has undervalued it ; for, by weighing with great accuracy thirty of the fineft Athenian tetradrachms in the collection of Dr. Hunter, and by comparing the average of their weight with the ftandard price of filver, he fhowed to my full fatisfaction, that the Attick drachma was worth about eight-pence half-penny, the fixth part of which was the obolus, or one penny, and five twelfths; the mina therefore, which Solon raifed from fixty to a hundred drachmas, was equal in value to three pounds ten fhillings and ten pence, and the talent, or fixty minas, to two bundred and twelve pounds ten Joillings. Three talents then, of which Pyrrhus was poffeffed, were fix hundred and thirty-feven pounds ten fhillings, a fmall fortune in England, but not inconfiderable at Athens, where filver was fcarce, and even the fuperfluities of life eafy to be procured. Whereever Attick money is mentioned in thefe fpeeches, the reader will in a moment reduce it to Englifh money by the help of this note.
89. -one witnefs only, named Pyretides] I although it is emphatical in itfelf, and feems to have no fmall force in the original ; but its common acceptation is hardly reconcilable with the context ; for it implies an actual fubornation of Pyretides, who yet was but a pretended witnefs, and difclaimed any knowledge of the affair. Can it be rendered thus-" Pyretides, whom he hired to attend him?" Or thus - "Pyretides, whom he attempted to fuborn ?"
90. -when Xenocles went to Thebes with an intention to eject our fervants from the mines] It is impoffible not to agree with Reifke that this paffage abounds with difficulties; nor could I have made it intelligible in a verbal tranflation. As to the words, sis to iscos.s.
 mofthenes has a fimilar repetition in the beginning of his fpeech againft Pantænetus, where the caufe relates to a difpute about a foundery in Maronea. Perhaps, on the authority of that parallel paffage, we might here read iv roirs egrors. How there came to be woorks in the territory of Thebes, or how an Athenian could have property in the Theban dominions, I cannot tell. It once occurred to me, that if $\left.\Theta_{n} \varepsilon^{6} \alpha\right\}_{\varepsilon}$ were the true reading, and not $\Theta_{\rho i \alpha} \zeta_{\xi}$ or $\Theta_{i \rho \alpha} \alpha \xi$, there might have been a diftrict in Attica of that name; but that was mere conjecture; and the diftance from Athens to Thebes in Bœotia appears in the beft maps of ancient Greece to be juft three hundred ftadia. 'E $\xi_{\alpha \gamma \omega \gamma \text { ǹ }}$ is a forenfick term exactly anfwering to oufter; and in this technical fenfe the verb : $\xi^{\prime} \alpha \gamma \varepsilon s$, , to ouft, is ufed by lixus, once in this fpeech, and twice in that on the eftate of Dicæogenes. Reifke fuppofes, in one of his notes, that the fervants of Xenocles were oufted by the brother of Endius; but why fhould Xenocles carry fo many witneffes out of Attica, to atteft an act which he could not pofitively forefee? The learned editor's note and tranflation are at variance in the interpretation of this dark paffage. I have chofen the leaft exceptionable fenfe, although one does not eafily fee the neceffity of travelling fo far to claim the eftate of Pyrrhus, the title to which was foon after brought before the court in another form : the reafoning, indeed, of Ifrus in this place proves, that the act of Xenocles was frivolous.

II 3. - fhould not pay the ordinary cofts of ${ }_{8 \sigma} \sigma_{\alpha 4}$, upon which paffage Reifke has the following ingenious note: " Locus difficilis, dictio " perambigua et inexplicabilis! Sufpicabar ali" quando tantundem hoc effe atque $x a \tau^{\prime}$ ह $\pi \omega \omega^{\prime} \varepsilon \lambda i \alpha \sim$, " non folummodo fextâ parte fummæ univerfæ, " quam valent bona petita mulctari, fed totâ " fummâ. Nunc dubito, an potius fignificet "procenfu. Cenfebatur civis quifque quantum " in bonis haberet, atque pro ifto cenfu major " aut minor cuique mulcta imogabatur. Qur" rant peritiores." Without pretending to be one of thofe, to whom the candid annotator refers for a folution of this difficulty, I will follow him in fairly confeffing my doubts and even my errors. I once imagined with him, that nothing more was meaned than the fine of an obolus for every drachma, or a fixth part of the fum claimed ; and I amufed myfelf with conjecturing that Katatotenoc might have been written by an ignorant tranfcriber for KATOBO nore; but I foon acquitted the tranfcriber and laughed at my own criticifm. As to the fuppofition that the party who made a falfe claim was amerced in proportion to his rank or cenfus, I never could adopt it : there is no authority for fuch an interpretation; and the wife Athenians would not have allowed a practice, which would have been a check to the wealthy only, who were lefs likely to inftitute iniquitous fuits, while the low and indigent might have difturbed the titles of their fellow-citizens without much danger. My next idea is expreffed in my tranflation: as rêor was anciently ufed for expenfe, whence zutinesa fignified frugality, and woivtener $\alpha$, profufion; I conceived that Ifæus meaned only the cofts of fuit, or expenfa litis, in quibus, to ufe the words of the Roman code, victor victori condemnandus eff; and the Athenians, I fuppofed, had the fame maxim. In this notion I acquiefced, till the very learned editor of Euripides favoured me with his opinion, that tikos was a generick name for a tax or duty, and comprehended, among other branches of the revenue, the wfutauĕu, or depofits, which are mentioned by Ariftophanes, and by Ifrus himfelf in his fecond fpeech, and which were forfeited to the publick by the unfuccefsful claimant: he thought, therefore, that the Greek words ought to be rendered - " not " only to be punifhed by a forfeiture of his de"pofits." This feemed plaufible; but it appears from the fcholiaft of $\mathbb{E}$ fchines, that thofe forfeited depofits were the perquifites of the jury, and I am now convinced without a fhadow of doubt, that the paffage muft be tranflated thus: " It would be right, judges, that every " claimant of an eftate, by gift or teftament, " who fails in proving his title, fhould not be " amerced by the limited power of the magiftrate, " but fhould forfeit to the ftate the full value of "the fortune which he falfely claimed." It was inconfiftent with a free government that any magiftrate fhould have an unlimited power of impofing fines: the fenate itfelf could impofe none exceeding five minas, which was lefs than eighteen pounds; and, in the fpeech of Demos* thenes againft Euergus and Mnefibulus, that venerable body are faid to have deliberated whether they fhould fet a fine upon Theophemus to the full extent of their legal power, or fhould deliver him over to a court of juftice, that he might be more feverely punifhed. Now among the various fenfes of tix $\boldsymbol{\tau}$ it denotes, according to Ulpian, the power of a magitrate; and the very words of Ifrus are taken from the law of Solon preferved by Demofthenes in his fpeech againft Macartatus: " Let the archon take care " of orphans and heireffes, and protect them " from violence: if any one fhould injure them, " he may fine the delinquent rarò rò $\tau$ tinos" which Potter tranflates very properly, as far as the limits of bis power extend. If the magiftrate thought he deferved a heavier penalty, he was directed by the fame law to prefer an accufation againft him, in the nature of an information ex officio, in the court of Helixa; where a corporal punifhment might be inflicted, or a larger mulct impofed, by the verdict of a jury. This paffage in Demofthenes puzzled Wolfius, who feems to have been diffatisfied with his own explanation of it; and Reifke, though he was apprized of Petit's interpretation, ftill returns to his own opinion, that $\tau^{\prime}$ रos there fignified the fortune and rank of the offender, an opinion unfupported, as I intimated before, either by reafon or authority.
120. - committed by the magiftrates to prifon (whence he was afterwards releafed) together with fome other felons, whom you publickly fentenced to an ignominious death] The revars. A moft perplexing paffage! If the relative belong to the eleven, inftead of the criminals, it muft be tranflated in this manner: " he " was firft committed to prifon, and afterwards " fet at liberty with feveral others, by thofe " eleven, all of whom were publickly executed " according to your fentence." It is well known that the office of the eleven at Athens correfponded in fome refpects to that of our juftices of peace, and in others to that of our fheriffs; they had power to commit felons, and were obliged to fee them executed after their conviction. Now had the Athenians at any time put fo many magiftrates to death for fuffering criminals to efcape, or for any other mifbehaviour, hiftory would certainly have recorded fo extraordinary a fact. There were, indeed, cleven minifters of the thirty tyrants, who are mentioned by Plato, and who were moft probably executed with their employers. Xenophon fays, that, after the reftoration of the popular government by Thrafybulus, the thirty tyrants, the ten governors of the Piræus, and the eleven who ruled in the city, were excluded from the benefit of the general amnefty. Hence the oath taken by the citizens, that they would not remember the injuries done by any, except the thirty and the eleven. If we fuppofe Chariades to have been releafed by thefe men, who muft have been killed in the fecond year of the ninety-fourth Olympiad, we may form a plaufible guefs concerning the date of this fpeech; for, if he fled from the Areopagus in the year after his releafe from prifon; if Nicoftratus died feventeen years after that ; and if two years were fpent in the controverfies among the fix firft claimants of his eftate; this caufe, in which Ifrus was employed, might have been tried in the twenty-firft year after the archonfhip of Euclid, in which year Demofthenes was born. After all, how uncertain are thefe conjectures upon conjectures !

124. Let the oath again be read.] Why fo? Could it fo foon have been forgotten? I am perfuaded, that thefe words were repeated by miftake; and that in this place were read the fchedule and inventory mentioned in the preceding pages.
125. having failed to Cnidos] This could not have been the fea-fight at Cnidos, in which Conon obtained a fignal victory over Pifander. It is probable that the naval engagement, in which Dicæogenes fell, was that defcribed by Thucydides in his eighth book, which happened in the firft year of the ninety-fecond Olympiad, and the twentieth of the Peloponnefian war; when Aftyochus defeated Charminus at Syme near Cnidos: now if we fuppofe, as we reafonably may, that the fortune of the deceafed was diftributed among his relations in the fame ycar, each of them muft have poffeffed his fhare till the fecond year of the ninety-fifth Olympiad. The troubles, to which Ifrus alludes, began in the archonfhip of Pythodorus, but lafted fome time after that of Euclid: in that interval the defendant Dicæogenes was inftigated by Melas to claim the whole eftate, although he did not obtain judgment for it, till twelve years had elapfed from the firft diftribution; and, as he enjoyed the profits of the eftate for ten years, this fpeech was probably delivered in the laft year of the ninety-feventh Olympiad, or two thoufand one hundred and fixty-fix years ago, and may therefore be confidered as one of the moft ancient monuments now extant in the world of the litigation, which naturally followed the liberty of tranfmitting property by will.

127. -having purchafed the houfe of their father and demolifhed it] Reifke alters the punctuation of the text, and gives it this fenfe: that Dicrogenes bought the houfe of Theopompus, and, having dug up the gaden, which feparated it from his own houfe, filled the intermediate fpace, and made one very large manfion for himfelf. Surely, this is a forced conftruction founded on a very uncertain conjecture. The cruelty of the act feems to have confifted in his having demolifhed the dwelling houfe and dug up the area, as if Theopompus had been a traitor. The fentence againft Antipho the orator and Archeptolemus is preferved, and part of it was, that their houfes flould be demolifbed. The word waluסxajm\{tv, which is ufed both in that fentence and by Ifrus, feems applicable to a building, but not to a garden. I perceive, on revifing this paffage, that the words $\pi \alpha$ ifdov önlav $\tau \varepsilon \tau \omega\rangle$, while they were boys, are left untranflated. Few tranflations, not fricaly verbal, are free from fuch overfights.
127. -he fent my coufin Cephifodotus to Corinth] Probably at the beginning of the ninety-fixth Olympiad, when the Corinthian war broke out.
129. - but the fifters of the deceafed whofe daughters we married] If we fuppofe that the fifters of Dicæogenes had daughters, who intermarried with their firt coufins, we need not have recourfe to Reifke's conjecture, that this. part of the fpeech was delivered by a different perfon.
138. -when Lechæum was taken] That is, in the fourth year of the ninety-fixth Olympiad, three hundred and ninety-two years before Chrift.
${ }_{1}$ 38. -the Eponymi] We are here obliged to Reifke for an excellent emendation: the old reading was iu.uviuwv, which can have no meaning, unlefs we fuppofe that ftatues had been erected to the memory of the brave citizens, who bore the fame name with Dicæogenes: but the Eponymi were the ten heroes, from whom the ten tribes of Attica were named, and many publick inftruments were hung up on their ftatues, which food in the moft confpicuous part of the city.

I40. -in the battle of Eleufis] That venerable fcholar and foldier, M. Paumier de Grentemefnil, has taken great pains to elucidate this paffage of Ifæus; but feems, after all, to have left it as dark as he found it. Whether Dicæogenes, the plaintiff's great-grand-father, perifhed, as Reifke imagines, in the irruption made by Pliftoanax into the diftrici of Eleufis, or whether he fell in one of the preceding fkirmifhes with the Corinthians, mentioned both by Thucydides and Diodorus, I muft leave undecided, and that without much regret. The battle of Spartolus, which the hiftorian of the Peloponnefian war has fully defcribed, was fought in the fourth year of the eighty-feventh Olympiad, the fame year in which the death of Pericles was more than compenfated by the birth of Plato. The conjecture of Paumier, who would read ' © $\lambda$ ovolas inftead of 'onvrias, and would render it Spartolus in the Olynthian territory, is ingenious but not convincing. Spartolus was known without an adjunct: had any been neceffary, it would have been Borfixn'; but a place, where Athens lof four hundred and thirty gallant men, with all their general officers, muft have acquired a dreadful celebrity. Still lefs can we be fatisfied with the hypothefis of Reifke, who propofes to read 'Coporias, although the Odryjians had nothing to do with Spartolus; but the orator, fays he, might not have been Jkilled in geography, and might bave confounded Odry/ia with Bottica. His other conceit, to which he was lefs partial, that the troop, which Menexenus commanded, was called Odydean, from Ulyffes, has more ingenuity in it. By what names the Athenians diftinguifhed their legions, I have not learned: if 'oxuoias be the true reading, the name may bear fome affinity to the words ixois or idefrov, deftructive.

14I. - the Olynthians] 'cavibior. "Su" fpectum hoc nomen. Olynthios, qui femper " Athenienfibus infefti fuiffent, pro his occubu"iffe dimicantes adverfus Peloponnefios, unde " ipfi orti effent, id verò miror, neque memini "ufpiam legere." Reifke. It is abfolutely certain, that the Corinthian, not the Peloponnefian, war is here meaned by Ifæus : now the Olynthians had actually begun to diftinguifh themfelves as an ambitious and martial people at the very time when this caufe was heard. I was unwilling, therefore, to alter the word in the text, although I have always fufpected, that 'Oжovinior was the genuine reading. The Locri Opuntii, who, both on their own coins and in the Greek books, are called fometimes Locrians, and fometimes Opuntians only, were the firft promoters of this war; and it cannot be conceived, that they remained inactive, when their fupporters the Thebans had engaged Athens in their quarrel.
141. - thy anceftors, who flew the tyrant] The fong of Calliftratus, which every fchoolboy in the higher claffes can fay by heart, has made the name and ftory of Harmodius familiar to all. If the defendant Dicæogenes defcended from that line through his father Proxenus, and not through his mother, the pedigree prefixed to this fpeech muft be corrected ; and, indeed, there does not feem to be fufficient reafon for fuppofing that Proxenus and the firft Menexenus were brothers.
142. - thou, Dicæogenes] Contempt and indignation cannot be more ftrongly marked, than by the pofition of the proper name at the end of this fpeech; but it would not have the fame effect in our language without voice, look, and gefture, to enforce it. The fingle name of Dicæogenes, as it ftands in the original, fupplies the place of epithets, and inftantly fuggefts the idea of every thing defpicable.
144. -when Meneftratus failed to Sicily] Who Meneftratus was, I know not ; but have not ventured to depart from the text. The date of this fpeech may be fixed with the greateft certainty; for Ifrus afterwards fays, that fiftytwo years had elapfed from the fatal expedition to Sicily in the archonfhip of Arimneftus, that is, from the firft year of the ninety-firft Olympiad; fo that, if from be exclufive, and complete years be meaned, the caufe was tried in the fecond year of the hundred and fourth Olympiad, when Chariclides was Archon. This was the year after Demofthenes, who was then in all probability a pupil of Ifrus, had fpoken in his own caufe againft his guardians.
153. Philoctemon was flain at Chios] Moft probably in one of the engagements mentioned by Thucydides in his eighth book. Timotheus, whom Phanoftratus accompanied, was perhaps the fon of Conon, who afterwards acquired fuch fame by his victory at Leucas ; and Chæreas, who married the daughter of Euctemon, might VOL. VII.
have been the fon of Archeftratus, whofe actions are recorded by the hiftorian.
155. -more than three talents] That is, including the price of the flaves, without which the fums enumerated amount to lefs than three talents by four minas and fifty drachmas. The text is extremely clear, but Reifke's note gives me infinite trouble; nor can I yet comprehend by what method of computation he made the whole fum rife to four talents, wanting fifteen minas. He was not, forfooth, with all his learning, a great aritbmetician.

166 -yet how can a man be faid to have died childlefs] We muft here give Reifke the applaufe, which he juftly deferves, for a moft happy and ingenious emendation. The original, in the edition of Stephanus, is, mws àv Aiss $\mu$ ou ris; but, in that of Aldus, it is, ח $\Omega \Sigma$ orn anaisimos tis, which was manifeftly corrupted by the change of three letters from ח $\Omega \Sigma$ OXN AIIAIE hN ostis; fo that the imaginary perfonage, 压fimus, vanifhes at once, and there remains a perfpicuous intelligible fentence. Another correction, which I cannot adopt, was propofed by the writer of a few notes on a loofe piece of paper, now preferved at Eton, in an edition of the Greek orators, which formerly belonged to Mr. Topham. Thefe notes were tranfcribed by Taylor, and his tranfcript was fent by Dr. Adkew to Reifke, who conftantly cites it by the name of liber Tophanis, defiring that nobody will afk him who Tophanis was, and frankly declaring that he could not tell. I mention this trifle for the fake of thofe, whofe curiofity may be raifed by feeing the references to this unknown critick.

173. -who has fince been appointed hierophant] The ispopourns, who conducted the ceremony of initiation into the myfteries, was not permitted to marry after his appointment to that facred office; but a previous ftate of celibacy was not a neceffary qualification. Lyfias, in his fpeech againft Andocides, mentions one Diocles, fon of Zacorus the hierophant.

This caufe was probably heard a fhort time after the Corinthian war.
189. -I am not without hopes] It is remarkable, that this paffage of Ifæus is copied almoft word for word by Demofthenes in his firft fpeech againft his guardian Aphobus, as the reflexions upon torture [p. 192] are repeated by him in one of thofe againft Onetor. Demofthenes was very young, when he delivered thofe four fpeeches; but I cannot fee fufficient ground for believing that Ifæus compofed them, although he might have given them a few touches with his pencil: they are not too highly finifhed for a boy of eighteen, who had ftudied under fuch a mafter, whofe language and manner he zealoufly imitated.
205. -a few ftony fields] In the old editions, $\varphi \in \lambda$ iado $\chi$ wefía arlo skefive dèbuxz. I wonder that Reifke fhould entertain a doubt concerning the genuine reading of this paffage, when he cites Harpocration, who fays exprefsly, that Ifxus, in this very fpeech, ufes esiria for a foony place where goats browfe. The orator wrote, penieas DE, which fome reader thought proper to explain called; and, when this rude glofs found its way into the text, the original itfelf was corrupted.
206. -when I have brought him to a trial] Diocles was afterwards profecuted; and Ifæus compofed a fpeech againft him, from which ten or eleven words are cited by Harpocration.
209. Aftyhilus died at Mitylene, whither he had failed with the army] I once imagined that he might have failed with Thrafybulus, who was fent on an expedition againft Lefbos in the archonfhip of Philocles, the year after the taking of Lechæum ; but, as it afterwards appears, that he had ferved at Corinth, in Theffaly, and during the whole Theban war, which was not concluded till the third year of the hundred and third Olympiad, I am at a lofs to determine on what occafion he could have gone with the army to Mitylene, unlefs it was in the focial war, in which Lefbos, probably, took fome part, as her neighbour Chios was fo warmly engaged in it. If my conjecture be juft, this was, perhaps, one of the laft fpeeches written by Ifæus; who, according to the hypothefis in my prefatory difcourfe, muft have been at leaft fixty years old when he compofed it.
226. -the daughter of Ariftarchus and fifter of Cyronides] This was the truth; but the text, which I think imperfect, makes him declare his mother to be the fifter of Ariftarchus. She would, indeed, have been the fifter of the younger Ariftarchus, if his adoption had been legal ; but why it was neceffary to admit the legality of that adoption before the magiftrate, and even to acknowledge it on record, I cannot conceive.
234. -After this came the Corinthian war] It follows from this paffage, that the fpeech was delivered fome time after the ninety-fixth Olympiad, above one-and-twenty centuries ago.
239. I begin my defence, judges, with a recital of the laws] I fuppofe that the laws of Solon concerning inheritances, were read by the clerk, before Theopompus opened his defence.
242. Phylomache obtained a fentence in her favour] The year in which this fentence was pronounced is fixed with the utmoft certainty by a depofition preferved in the feech of Demofthenes againft Macartatus, concerning which I intend to difcourfe at large in the commentary. The witnefles depofe, " that they were prefent before the arbitrator in the archonfinip of Nicophemus, when Phylomache, the daughter of Eubulides, obtained a decree for the eftate of Hagnias againft all her opponents." Now Nicophemus was archon in the fourth year of the hundred and fourth Olympiad, three hundred and fixty-one years before Chrift. Some time muft have been fpent in the litigation which followed before this caufe could have been ripe for a hearing; and we cannot be very far from the mark, if we conclude that it was heard two thoufand one hundred and thirtyfive years ago.
255. I will fhow in what manner I have regulated the concerns of my nephew] The orator promifes to enlarge upon two heads, and he only touches upon the firft, namely, the comparifon between the fortunes of Theopompus and Stratocles; hence it is manifeft, that part of the fpeech is unhappily loft.
256. His eftate was this:]

Stratocles.
T. M. D.

Theopompus.
T. M. D.

The patrimony of Theopompus muit have been included in the farm at Enea; and it is neceffary to read wevioxar~inas, in the valuation of Hagnias's eftate. The intereft of the forty mimas at nine obolus's a month, is properly computed; and the young man's fortune, including the legacy of Theophon, was exactly eight talents, or feventeen hundred pounds. Nothing can be more clear than the text, nothing more fimple than the calculation ; yet the perplexity, to which Reifke was reduced, is perfectly ridiculous; for, by jumbling the principal with the interef, and the rents with the value of the eftate, and by adding together all the fums named in the whole paragraph, he makes the property of Stratocles amount to more than ten talents. "Verum fatebor enim, fays he, ad " calculandum et omnes omninó artes mathe" maticas invitâ Minervâ natus fum." He then attempts a correction, but, finding even that irreconcileable with the computation which follows, he concludes in defpair-" ut brevis " fim, in componendis hifce rationibus pecuni" ariis exitum non reperio."
258. The Lacedæmonians would confider fuch an expedition as a breach of the peace] This was, probably, the general peace concluded in the third year of the hundred and third Olympiad, and broken the next year in the ar.
chonfhip of Chio. The Macartatus, againft whom Demofthenes compofed his feech, was the fon of Theopompus, mentioned in the preceding page, who was appointed to preferve the name and family of the bold adventurer, his maternal uncle.
268. When I commanded a galley in the archonfhip of Cephifodotus.] That is, in the third year of the hundred and third Olympiad; but if Cephifodorus be the true reading, as Sylburgius was inclined to believe, this fpeech muft have been compofed either during the focial war, or after it ; and Ifæus muft have had the happinefs of feeing his pupil advance towards the perfection of eloquence ; for the oration againft Leptines was delivered nearly at the fame time. It appears from Harpocration, who cites three lines from this fpeech, that the citizen, who afferted the freedom of Eumathes, was named Xenocles.

COMMENTARY

ov

I S 厌US.

TTHE ten fpeeches of Ifrus are the moft ancient in the world on the interefting fubject of legal and teftamentary fucceffion to property, except, perhaps, that of Ifocrates on the eftate of Thrafylochus in Egina, which has rather the air of a rhetorical exercife than of a real addrefs to a court of judicature, and tends very little to elucidate the topicks, which it is now my intention to difcufs: next to thefe in order of time on the fame fubject are two fpeeches of Demothenes, one againft Leochares, and the other againft Macartatus; from the fecond of which I have received fo much light, that, if it had not been extant, I fhould not have underftood many paffages in my author. It was my firft defign to fubjoin at full length this very curious monument of Athenian jurifprudence; but, as the fpeech confifts chiefly of depofitions and recitals of various laws, which give it very much the refemblance of a well drawn brief, I think it better to fum up the evidence in the caufe, with fuch obfervations as will render it perfpicuous, and to illuftrate the whole with a complete pedigree of the family, which will alfo be ufeful in explaining other parts of the Attick law. Demofthenes himfelf had intended, as he tells the court, to draw a genealogical table for their infpection; but, reflecting that thofe jurymen who fat at a diftance would be unable to have a diftinct view of it, he thought it neceffary to explain it by words, which all of them might hear: what Demofthenes chofe to omit, I have performed with great care for the convenience of the reader; and here we may take notice of the advantage which juftice derives among us in fimilar caufes from the facility of multiplying copies; for, as a number of pedigrees may be printed at an expenfe not to be confidered in important trials, the court, the jury, and the bar, may eafily go along with the leading counfel, and form a perfect idea of the queftion before them. The difficulty, indeed, of explaining a long genealogy by words alone, efpecially where many of the perfons bear exactly the fame name, together with the number of miftakes occafioned by the negligence of copyifts, made the fpeech againft Macartatus fo dark and perplexed, that the learned almoft gave it up as inexplicable; and, when Oporinus complained to Wolfius that he could not comprehend the whole of his Latin verfion, "Do you," faid the tranflator, " underftand the Greek ?" "No," faid the other. "Then," replied Wolfius, "we are even; and we fhall, I believe, have "s many companions in our ignorance." The grave editor's remark, that, " although the " fpeech take its title from Macartatus or moft "bappy, yet it makes the interpreter moft mifer"able, and although it relate to the inheritance " of Hagnias, a name fignificative of purity, yet "s the text of it is by no means pure," may fhow with how bad a grace a fcholar attempts to be witty. I confefs, that the whole compofition appeared to me more obfcure than the oracles which are cited in it ; until I perceived, before I had even feen the Leipzick edition, that the tenth fpeech of Ifæus was delivered in a previous caufe concerning the fame eftate ; that it was compofed by the great mafter in defence of the very Theopompus, whom his illuftrious pupil afterwards attacked fo vehemently; and that the two fpeeches, though each of them apart was extremely dark, reflected fo frong a light on each other, that both became perfectly luminous. The account, which I fhall now give, of the numerous family, in which fuch caufes arofe as employed the firt advocates of Greece, will include a commentary on both their fpeeches, and neceffarily comprife an explanation of feveral heads in the laws of Solon.

BUSELUS, a burgefs of CEon, was father of five fons, among whom he diftributed his property; and they became the heads of as many diftinct branches, which continued to flourifh and fpread themfelves, till HAGNIAS died childlefs, and, though an attempt was made to prove the contrary, inteftate. His fortune was not much more than fix hundred pounds; but no fortune ever gave birth to fo much litigation, and, confequently, to fo much knavery. Two very different fories are told concerning the merits of the firf claimants ; one, which the reader will recollect, by Ifrus in the perfon of Theopompus, and another by Demofthenes in the perfon of Sofitheus, who married Phylomache, the fecond of that name. If we believe Theopompus, who does not appear in a very favourable light, Hagnias actually made a will in favour of his niece, with a fubfitution to Glauco after her death; but he gives no particular account, how Phylomache, if the will was valid, was able to obtain a fentence againft Glauco, and to difpoffefs him: Sofitheus, on the other hand, afferts, that the will was proved to be a forgery, and that the whole was the contrivance of Theopompus himfelf, who gave the principal evidence for Glauco, and a brother of his, named Glaucus. It is agreed, that Theopompus afterwards commenced a fuit againft Phylomache, and fucceeded in it; but Ifæus afcribes his fuccefs to the fuperiority of his title, while Demofthenes imputes it to an artifice by which the jury were circumvented; for he avers, that the two half-brothers of Hagnias, defigning to affift Theopompus in their turn, joined with him and one Eupolemus in claiming the eftate; that the archon, therefore, permitted the claimants to fpeak four times as long as the defendant, for each of them had the fame quantity of water in his clepfydra: that the confederates gave falfe evidence for one another, and told a number of grofs lies, which Phylomache's advocate had not time to refute; that the jurymen were perplexed and divided; but that Theopompus gained his caufe by a very fmall majority.

The next fuit, which the fortune of Hagnias produced, was the information againft Theopompus, for whom Ifxus wrote his tenth fpeech; and in that alfo (whether jufly or not we fhall afterwards examine) he had a verdict in his favour; for, after his death, we find his fon, the younger Macartatus, in poffeffion of the disputed eftate ; and it is he, againft whom the hufband of Phylomache fet up a claim for the third Eubulides: what was the event of this laft fuit, it is impoffible to difcover with certainty; but, in order to fix with tolerable accuracy the refpective merits of all the claimants, I fhall recapitulate the Athenian laws of inheritances and devifes, comparing them, as I proceed, with thofe of fome other nations, ancient and modern, and fhall thence take occafion to illuftrate the nine preceding fpeeches of Ifxus.

I fhall firt review the laws of heirfhip by proximity of blood ; and, fecondly, the laws of heirfhip by appointment, which was either by adoption during life, or by teftamentary difpofition; and, under the laft head, I fhall confider firft how wills were made at Athens, and next how they were revoked.
I. Had Hagnias died leaving only male iffue, his fons would have taken equal fhares of his inheritance, like heirs in gavelkind; a law no lefs favourable to that juft balance of property which Solon meaned to eftablifh, than the law of primogeniture is agreeable to the military ariftocracies, in which it has prevailed; but there was another principle in the Athenian government, which, without counteracting the fpirit of equality, kept the partibility of eftates within proper limits; for, as the moft expenfive offices were filled by men of a certain cenfus, it was highly expedient that there fhould always be a number of citizens moderately rich, who might contribute to the publick charges, without being too much elevated by opulence above the common level. Hence proceeded the complaints againft men, who had diffipated or aliened an eftate, out of which gallies ufed to be furnifhed, and entertainments provided.

Thus, in the fixth fpeech, Thrafyllus urges with vehemence, and even calls witneffes to prove, that the fortune of Apollodorus, which was known to have contributed largely to the naval expenfes, had been reduced to nothing by the negligence and profufion of his adverfaries; and he afterwards declares the duty of a good citizen to confift in preferving his eftate, and in paying his contributions with alacrity: fo, in the tenth, Theopompus guards againft any fufpicion of having aliened a certain farm with a view to an exemption from ferving the publick offices; and, in the third fragment, the guardian cenfures his ward for having fold and difperfed his patrimony, which he might have rendered ferviceable to his country and honourable to himfelf. Now, as thefe accufations were attended with very ferious ill confequences to thofe who deferved them, as moft of the Athenians were animated by a true fpirit of pa-triotifm, and as a gentleman, proud, poor, and idle, was a monfter unknown in their ftate, I cannot help confidering the law of partible inheritances as not only the mof natural, but at Athens even the wifeft, and the law of primogeniture as a great evil introduced into fome countries for the prevention of greater. It were fuperfluous to add, as the fubject has been exhaufted by others, an enumeration of the many illuftrious nations, who have fhown no preference to the firft-born, or to difcourfe, after Selden and the Mifna, on the double portion of the Hebrews; but it may be neceffary to obferve, that the fucceffion in firpes prevailed, moft probably, at Athens in the defcending line, as it certainly did in the collateral: thus, had Bufelus died worth five talents, leaving his fons Cleocritus, Stratius, Hagnias, Habron, and the children only of his fon Eubulides, each of the four fons would have taken one talent, and Philager, Euctemon, Calliftratus, reprefenting their father, would have fucceeded to twenty minas each. This would have occafioned a fubdivifion of the fortune left by Bufelus; but the induftry of his grandfons, incited and rewarded by the fpirit of the conftitution, would foon have raifed their property to a juft height, as a well almoft exhaufted by too large draughts, is quickly and plentifully fupplied by the fpring.
II. If Hagnias had left iffue male and female, the fons would have taken equal fhares of his eftate, but muft have affigned fuitable portions to their fifters: thus if Sofitheus had died worth three talents, Eubulides, whom he had emancipated, would have been entitled to no part of them, but Sofia, Meneftheus, and Calliftratus, would have received each a talent, and muft have contributed to their fifter's fortune ; and thus, on the death of the firft Hagnias, his only fon Polemo would have inherited his whole eftate, but muft have given Philomache in marriage with a portion conformable to his inheritance: what fhare of it was in this manner transferred to the fifters, I cannot determine; but am inclined to think that the affignment of it was left to the affection and liberality of the brothers. It was reckoned highly difgraceful to be ungenerous on thefe occafions; and, in the fpeech on the eftate of Ariftarchus, the complainant recommends himfelf to the favour of the jury, by informing them, that, although bis polfe.fions were inconfiderable, be had given his fifter in marriage with as bandfome a portion as be could spare. Befides, a fufpicion of illegitimacy was caft upon girls, who were married with a fmall fortune in proportion to the effate of their fathers; thus, when Pyrrhus left three talents, and his daughter Phila was taken by
vOL. VII.

Xenocles with a thoufand drachmas only, there was great reafon to believe, and Ifæus warmly contended, that her hurband knew her to be illegitimate, fince he married her without even a tenth part of ber paternal eftate: but here I cannot help diffenting from Perizonius, who feems to have collected from this paffage, that the tenth part of the inheritance was the ufual portion given to fifters among the Athenians, as it was among the Hebrews; for I find no trace in the other fpeeches of any fixed rule ; and even, in the very caufe to which I have juft alluded, eigbteen minas, or the tenth part of three talents, would have been thought a moderate portion out of an inheritance, which at Athens was efteemed confiderable; but Phila had not near fo much; and it happened, that the fortune of a thoufand drachmas, which the received from her brother by adoption, was exactly the votico, or baftard's part, which was ufually allotted to an illegimate child. It is probable, that the portion was often adapted to the circumftances of the hufband; for twenty minas were given to Stratocles, and as many to Theopompus, with their refpective wives, whence the latter proves the fcantinefs of his own fortune, urging that fo fmall a fum would not bave been given to a man of large polfeflions; and the hufband, indeed, was commonly bound in the apoorwor, or marringe fettlement, to affign a part of his own eftate of equal value at leaft with the portion, as a fecurity for its being reftored to the perfon who gave it, in cafe either of a divorce, or of the wife's death without iffue; and the property thus fettled was diftinguifhed, like all other hypothecated eftates, by fmall columns and infcrip tions, called bpon, erected on the land, or affixed to the houfes, and containing a fpecification of the fum for which they were pledged. This method, which refembled the donatio propter nuptias of the ancient Romans, appears more fimple than our modern fettlements; and, as the Athenian cimortujiuaro or bypotbecations were open and notorious, like our old feoffments, they feem to have provided for the iffue of the marriage no lefs effectually than the eftates in ftrict fettlement fo ftrongly tied by our conveyancers; but, as to the fortunes of daughters, our trufts and long terms, over which our courts of equity have fo ample a jurifdiction, fecure a provifion for them with more determinate exactnefs than the law of Athens; where however it is reafonable to believe, that the Archon could compel the fons to affign competent portions.

In this place I cannot forbear mentioning an inftance in our own law, where juftice, reafon, and fair analogy, are not yet, as I apprehend, completely difengaged from the fhackles of feudal ftrictnefs. The celebrated rule, that "wheres* ever an eftate of freehold is given to the an"ceftor, and a fubfequent limitation is made, in " the fame conveyance, to his beirs or the beirs " of bis body, he fhall take in the firft cafe a "fee-fimple, and in the fecond, a fee-tail," has certainly prevailed for near five hundred years; and, as it is not only venerable on account of its antiquity, but has been the bafis of moft titles in the kingdom, let us hope that it will prevail for as many centuries more, without caring whether it was originally contrived, that the lord might not lofe his wardfhip, relief, and other profits of his feignory, or whether it was defigned to facilitate the alienation of property, and to prevent the inconverience of leaving the fee in abeyance ; or, laftly, whether it only means that, in general, thofe who take by the name of heirs, muft take in the capacity of heirs, that is by defcent, and confequently that their anceftor muft have a defcendible eftate. Whatever might have been the reafon of the rule (and each of the juft-mentioned reafons is fupported by great authorities), it could only have been a fubfidiary or fuppletory rule, calculated to afcertain the intention of parties, where other evidence of intention was either wanting or doubtful; but, where the meaning is clear beyond a fhadow of doubt, that the perfons defcribed as heirs are not to take in that quality, and efpecially where hardfhips and contradictions would follow fuch a conftruction, the rule ought in fenfe and reafon to give way, or rather it ought not to be called in aid, when the intent is plain without it. Let us therefore fuppofe, that, in confideration of an intended marriage, the father of the wife fettles an eftate upon the bufband for bis life, remainder to the wife for ber life, remainder to the beirs of bis body on ber to be begotten: no man can harbour a doubt of the intention to fecure a provifion for the iffue of the marriage; yet what can reftrain the parents from levying a fine or fuffering a recovery? What can hinder the hufband from aliening the eftate, difflpating the money arifing from it, like Xenænetus in the eighth fpeech of Ifæus, and leaving his children in extreme indigence? Had articles only been made before marriage in the fame words, or had there been both articles and a fettlement referring exprefsly to them, equity would have made the hufband tenant for life with remainder in tail to the iffue ; but, if there had been no executory agreement, and only a deed executed, I do not know that any court would interfere, or even incline to give relief on the ground of miftake, the parties having inadvertently ufed words, which carry an eftate-tail, when they clearly intended a ftrict fettlement ; yet if the intent be not indubitable, a court of equity ought not to depart from the technical import of the terms even in articles, and, if it be unqueftionable, a court of law, one would imagine, ought to give it efficacy over artificial words, even in a deed; nor would refpectable authorities be wanting, if this were the place for producing them, to prove, that " the words beirs or beirs of the body, are " not to be conftrued as words of limitation, " either in a will or in a deed, when the inten" tion of the teftator or of the parties is plainly "declared, or manifeftly appears, that they fhall "be conftrued as words of purchafe." This queftion, indeed, is not likely to arife on a mar-riage-fettlement, in which it is ufual to give eftates for life to the parents, with contingent remainders in tail to the firft and every other fon, after the interpofition of truftees to preferve them; but I have feen fettlements in the form above fuppofed; and I thought this digreffion proper enough in comparing the laws of Eng. land with thofe of Athens, to which we will now return,

If the brother was an infant, and the fifters marriageable, it may naturally be imagined, that the guardian allotted their portions out of his ward's eftate ; and we find, that the four daughters of Stratocles were married with handfome fortunes during the guardianfhip of their uncle

Theopompus: thus it appears, in the fourth caufe, that Dicæogenes gave the fifter of the complainant to Protarchides, with a houfe in Ceramicus worth forty minas; a large portion, if we confider the many fhares into which the eftate had been divided, and the inhuman conduct of Dicæogenes towards his coufins.

It may feem ftrange that the law of SOLON, mentioned by Plutarch, which prohibited the qesprì or portion (as it is commonly rendered), and ordained " that a bride fhould bring in marriage " no more than three robes and fome utenfils of " fmall value," fhould in lefs than two centuries be fallen totally into difufe, efpecially as all Solon's ordinances had been made perpetual after the archonfhip of Euclid by the law of Diocles; but, although the words $\varphi s p y$ ind wgot be generally ufed as fynonymous, yet Petit with great reafon fuppofes that they were different: the legiflator could never have forbidden the latter, or the fortune given by heirs with their female relations, for which his inftitutions carefully provided; but, as the luxury of new-married women in apparel, trinkets, and furniture, had become exceffive, he gave a feafonable check to it by reftraining the geval or bridal prefents to three robes and a few moveables. Thus, when Ciron gave his daughter to Naufimenes with twenty-five minas, togetber with clothes and fome little ornaments of gold, the money appears to have been the woors, and the reft, what was pro-perly-called $\varphi s o v i)$; although the motive affigned by Plutarch for Solon's regulation, namely, that he would not have marriage confidered as a vile traffick for gain, but as a contract founded on affection, and intended for purpofes beneficial to the ftate, might have induced him to abolifh, or limit both the one and the other. At the fame time I am aware, that the iگшiтposxa of the more modern Greek jurifts were, probably, the fame with the wagcipspra, or goods over and above the portion, which are mentioned by Ulpian in the Digeft, and from which our term paraphernalia is apparently borrowed; but, on the whole, I am perfuaded that there was a diftinction between the two words in the ancient Attick dialect. In fume refpects the wрoи, itfelf refembled our paraphernalia, as it was not devifable by the hufband, nor confidered as his abfolute property; but it had this further advantage, that it was not liable to the claims of his creditors, even on a deficiency of affets.

It will not be foreign from the fubject, to remark in this place, that the cuftomary law of the old Arabians obliged every brother to give his fifter in marriage with a fortune; and that, in order to evade this law, it was ufual among them to contract double marriages, one man taking the fifter of another without a portion, and giving his own fifter in return on the fame terms ; but this practice, which they called Sbigár, was declared illegal by Mahomed. The divifion of an inheritance enjoined in the fourth chapter of the Alcoran is very remarkable ; it is there ordered generally, that a male foall bave the foare of two females; fo that, by the Mahomedan rule, Charidemus would have had two thirds, and Phanoftrate one third, of the eftate left by their father Stratius: for Selden is miftaken in fuppofing, that each would have fucceeded to a moiety. Perhaps, this ordinance of the Afiatick lawgiver was more confonant to natural juftice than that of Soion, who feems to have made the fortunes of Athenian women too vague and precarious.
III. Let us now put the cafe, that Hagnias had died leaving only female iffue; the next of kin, who would have been entitled to the fucceffion, had there been no children, might have claimed the daughters in marriage, together with their inheritance, of which their fons born in wedlock would have taken poffeffion at their full age. If a fon was left, as in the former cafe, his fifter was called intupon* or portionefs; but a daughter, who had no brother, was diftin-
 I mention, becaufe the latter word occurs perpetually in the fpeeches of Ifæus. Thus, in the ninth caufe, when the daughter of Ariftarchus, on the emancipation of Cyronides, and the death both of Demochares and her fifter, became fole heirefs, her father's brother Ariftomenes, or, on his refufal, her firft coufin Apollodorus, might have applied to the Archon, and obtained a decree for taking her in marriage; and, in the fame manner, Phylomache, the only daughter of Eubulides, was claimed and married by Sofitheus, whofe title will appear in a fubfequent part of this commentary. The right of the neareft kinfman to marry the heirefs was fo firmly eftablifhed, that even the act of her own father could not fuperfede it ; and hence arofe the moft iniquitous and intolerable of all the Athenian laws, an odious remnant of the ancient inftitution, which Solon in part abolifhed, that eftates 乃hould remain for ever in the family of the deceafed; for we learn from the fecond fpeech, that even if a father had given his daughter in marriage to a perfon whom he approved, yet, if he died without legitimate fons, the next of kin might take her from her hufband and marry her himfelf, and lfæus mentions it as a known fact, that many men had by this law been deprived of their wives; but Petit was clearly deceived in imagining, that the fame law prevailed, when the father had devifed his property together with his daughter; for in that cafe the next heir was wholly excluded. Yet farther; when the unjuft guardian Ariftomenes, in defiance of the law, gave his niece without her eftate, and with a portion only, to the father of the complainant, and when her hufband afterwards applied to her kinfmen for the inheritance, to which fhe was intitled, and which they illegally poffeffed, they compelled him to defift from his claim by threatening to diffolve his matrimonial union, and to demand his wife for one of them, as her neareft relation.

Nothing can be conceived more cruel than the fate of vaffalage in which women were kept by the polifhed Athenians, who might have boafted of their tutelar goddefs Minerva, but had certainly no pretenfions on any account to the patronage of Venus. All unneceffary reftraints upon love, which contributes fo largely to relieve the anxieties of a laborions life, and upon marriage, which conduces fo eminently to the peace and good order of fociety, are odious in the higheft degree ; yet at Athens, whence arts, laws, humanity, learning, and religion are faid to have fprung, a girl could not be legally united with the object of her affection, except by the confent of her xús or controller, who was either her father or her grandfire, her brother or her guardian: their domination over her was transferred to the hufband, by whom fhe was ufually confined to the minute details of domeftick economy, and from whom fhe might in fome inftances be torn, for the fake of her fortune, by a fecond coufin, whom probably the detefted; nor was her dependence likely to ceafe; for we may collect from the fpeech on the eftate of Philoctemon, that even a widow was at the difpofal of her neareft kinfman, either to be married by him, or to be given in marriage, according to his inclination or caprice. Yet more; a hufband might bequeath his wife, like part of his eftate, to any man whom he chofe for his fucceffor; and the mother of Demofthenes was actually left by will to Aphobus, with a portion of eighty minas: the form of fuch a bequeft is preferved in the firft fpeech againft Stephanus, and runs thus:-" This is the laft will of Pafio " the Acharnean. I give my wife Archippe to "Phormio, with a fortune of one talent in Pe" parrhethus, one talent in Attica, a houfe worth " a hundred minas, together with the female " flaves, the ornaments of gold, and whatever " elfe may be in it." For all thefe hardfhips, which the Athenian women endured, a very poor compenfation was made by the law of Solon, which ordered their hufbands to fleep with them three times a month.

Whether the fairer, but weaker, part of our fpecies fhould, in well-ordered ftates, fucceed to an entire inheritance, and difpofe of it as their paffion or fancy prompts them, may admit of fome doubt; and we find on this point a remarkable diverfity in the laws of different nations, and of the fame nation in different ages; on which fubject Perizonius has written a learned differtation. The moft ancient fuit, perhaps, of which any account remains, was that inftituted by the five daughters of Zelophehad, who died without fons, for a polfeflion among the brethren of their father: they gained their caufe; and it was thenceforth a rule among the Jews, that " if a man died, having no fon, his " inheritance fhould go to his daughter;" but when it was remonftrated, that, if Mahla, Noa, Hagla, Milca, and Tirza, were to marry the fons of other tribes, their inheritance would be taken from the tribe of their father, the divine legiflator anfwered, Let the daughters of Zelophehad marry whom they tbink beft; only in the family of their father's tribe let them marry; and if Solon had made no other reftriction, his ordinance would have been more conformable to nature and reafon; but the narrow policy of keeping an eftate confined in a fingle family can be juftified by no good principle whatever.

The pagan Arabs, although divided into txibes, had no fuch reftraint upon their natural inclinations; for there is not a more common topick in their ancient elegiack poems than the feparation of two lovers by the removal of the tents belonging to their refpective tribes, which were not connected, like thofe of the Hebrews and Greeks, by any regular bond of union, but feem to have been diftinct and independent communities: : as their inftitutions, indeed, were perfectly military, they excluded women, who were unable to ferve in their wars, from all right of fucceffion to property; but Mabomed, like another Juftinian, abolifhed this law of his countrymen, and ordained exprefsly, that females foould bave a determinate part of what their parents and kinfmen left, whether it were little or whether it were much, allowing a double portion to the males, on account, fays he, of the advantages which God bas given them over the other fex.

Among the early inhabitants of Rome, both males and females were permitted to inherit the poffeffions of their anceftors; and this appears to have been the law of the twelve tables, which were derived in part from the inftitutions of Solon ; but the middle jurifprudence, departing from the old fimplicity fo favourable to legiflation, admitted fifters only to a fraternal inheritance, and rejected all other female relations from the agnatick fucceffion, as if they had been perfect ftrangers, till the Prætorian equity miti gated this rigour by degrees; and Juftinian, whofe benevolence in this refpect has been highly commended, reftored the Decemviral law, with fome additional directions of his own. The feudal law, like that of the old Arabians, and from the fame principle of military policy, generally excluded daughters, unlefs there had been a fpecial inveftiture of their father in favour of them; and it is almoft fuperfluous to mention the ftrictnefs of the Salick feudifts, who preferred one fex to the total exclufion of the other: our own laws obferve a medium between their feverity and the latitude of the imperial conftitution.
IV. If we fuppofe that Hagnias had left neither fons nor daughters, but grandchildren only, fome difficulties may arife in adjufting the divifion of his inheritance: there might have been grandfons alone, or granddaughters alone, or both grandfons and granddaughters; and if they had all been the children of one fon or one daughter, I conceive that the three preceding rules are exactly applicable to thefe three cafes ; for it is certain, that, in the defcending line, no diftinction was made at Athens between a title conveyed through a female or through a male, as there was in Rome, till the new ordinances relaxed the ancient ftrictnefs. This appears evidently from the fecond fpeech, where Ifrus reprefents it as impoffible for Endius to have been ignorant, that, had Phila been the only legitimate daughter of Pyrrhus, ber cbildren would have fucceeded to their grandfather's whole eftate; and this was the very title of Ciron's grandfons; for the writer of the Greek argument to the feventh feeech was unqueftionably miftaken in fuppofing the caufe to be ftrong in equity but weak in law, and in imagining that the orator moft artfully fuppreffed the rule concerning the preference given to thofe who claim through males; a rule which did not relate to lineal defcendants, as we learn with certainty from the fpeech on the eftate of Apollodorus: had the fecond Phylomache, therefore, died before her father Eubulides, her four fons and daughter would have been, on his death, in the fame fituation, as if they had been his children. We may next conceive, that BUSELUS had furvived his five fons, and then died, leaving as many talents to be diftributed among all their iffue: it is probaBle, that Oenanthe would have taken, as heirefs, the fhare of her father Cleocritus; and that the daughter of Habron alfo would have had one talent; fecondly, that Charidemus and Polemo would have taken each a fifth part of the inheritance, giving marriage-portions refpectively to their fifters : and thirdly, that the remaining talent would, as I remarked before, have been divided equally among the three fons of Eubulides; and thus, if Charidemus had been dead, the great-grandfons Theopompus, Stratocles, and Stratius would have received each of them a third part of his allotment, or twenty minas; and, had Polemo been gone, his talent would have defcended to HAGNIAS with the fame obligation to give his fifter a fortune : in fact the inheritance of Hagnias was two talents and fifty minas, fo that Bufelus muft have left fourteen talents and ten minas, or above three thoufand pounds fterling, unlefs we fuppofe, that his fon Hagnias, and his grandfon Polemo, had augmented their fortune by diligence or parfimony.

I muft here obferve, that I have no certain authority for this fucceffion in firpes to a grandfather's eftate at Athens: it is clear, indeed, from the fixth fpeech of Ifrus, that a daugbter Jaared ber paternal inberitance equally with a grandfon by another daugbter deceafed; but if the firft Hagnias had furvived both Polemo and Phylomache, I cannot fee what claim Eubulides II. could have made to his property, except on a fuppofition, that the grandchildren fucceeded in capita; for he could have gained nothing by reprefenting his mother, who was herfelf no heirefs, but a portione/s only, and would have been wholly excluded by her brother.

There is a difficult paffage in the fpeech on the eftate of PHILOCTEMON, which relates to the queftion now before us, and which feems to have been imperfectly explained by Defiderius Heraldus, whofe Animadverfions on Salmafius, although equal in virulence to the invectives of Milton, are a very rich mine of learning on the fubject of Attick and Roman law. His words are thefe: "The imioncoica or conteft for " marrying an beirefs, took place, not only if " one or more daughters were left without a " brother, but alfo if one of them remained fin" gle, after their father had given. the reft in " marriage; as we may fairly collect from the " fpeech of Ifxus on the inheritance of Pbilocte" mon, where it appears, that Euctemon had. " left feveral daughters, one of whom was un" married, together with a fon who furvived him; " and that a man, who called himfelf their " neareft kinfman, claimed this daughter, whofe " fhare of Euctemon's eftate was become liable "to conteft. Now that Euctemon had feveral " daughters, and that one of them was unmar" ried, is evident from the fpeeck; and the fol " lowing paffage alludes to the $\bar{\varepsilon} \pi \delta^{i} i x \alpha \sigma_{i}^{\prime} \alpha: O b-$ "Serve too the affurance of Androcles, who firft "claimed for bimpelf, the daugbter of Euctemon, "as if ghe bad been the beiress, and infifted on " bis right to a fifth part of the property, as if it "bad been liable to litigation, yet bas now "averred that Euctemon left a legitimate fon. "Has be not by this clearly convicted bimfelf of " baving given falfe evidence? He certainly bas; " for, bad a Jon of Euctemon begotten in wedlock " been living, bis daugbter could not bave been " beirefs, nor could the eftate bave been open to "controverfy. By thefe words he impeached " the proteftation of Androcles, who afferted " the right of Antidorus to Euctemon's inhe" ritance, as his legitimate fon, but had himfelf " demonftrated the falfity of his own averment, " by claiming the unmarried daughter of the " deceafed as her next of kin, together with a "fifth part of the eftate (we muft fuppofe that " four daughters were married), which he could " never have done, had a legitimate fon of Euc"temon been alive; fince, in that cafe, the "daughters were excluded from the fucceffion, " and received portions from their father or " their brother." How plaufible this appears ! but Ifæus exprefsly tells the court, that Euctemon had only two daughters, the widow of Chæreas, who had one daughter, and the wife of Phanoftratus, who had two fons: now Ergamenes, Hegemon, and Philoctemon all died without iffue before their father, and we muft imagine, when we are examining the claim of Androcles, that the laft of them had no fon by adoption or will; in which cafe, if the wives of Chæreas and Phanoftratus took as daugbters and heireffes of Euctemon, each of them would have been entitled to a moiety of his fortune, or, if the fecond daughter had been alfo dead, her fhare would have been divided between Chæreftratus and his brother; but I am inclined to believe, that they claimed as reprefentatives of their three brothers, and it will prefently be fhown in the proper place, how the widow, whom Androcles demanded in marriage, might have had a right to no more than a fifth part of the inheritance.
V. In regard to the melancholy fucceffion, as it was juftly called, of parents to the poffeffions of their deceafed children, there has been a great variety in the ordinances or cuftoms of ancient and modern nations both in Europe and Afia. The Jewifh law of inheritances depended almoft wholly on the following rules, 1 . The children of the deceafed fucceeded to his property, and, on failure of them, his father inherited. 2. The heir being dead, he was reprefented by his iffue. 3. Males were preferred to females in equal degrees. If Sofitheus, therefore, had been a native of Judea, his eftate would have defcended to his four fons, the eldeft, Sofia, taking his double fhare; but if all of them had been dead without children, the daughter would have taken the whole; fhe dying childlefs, the property would have afcended to Sofia I. the father of Sofitheus; and his heir would have been traced exactly in the fame manner; that is, the brothers of the deceafed would have fucceeded as parceners, but the eldeft would not have been entitled to a double portion : on default of brothers and their iffue, the fifters would have been called to the fucceffion ; and, none of them or their children being alive, the inheritance would have gone up to Calliftratus the grandfather, if living ; or, if not, to his fons, the uncles of Sofitheus, and their iflue, or, on failure of that line, to the aunts; but, had they too been dead without children, and had the great-grandfather Eubulides I. been alive, it would ftill have afcended to him, or devolved upon Philager and Euctemon the great uncles, and the heirs of their bodies; and they alfo failing, it would have been inherited by the other fons of the anceftor Bufelus, and their defcendants reprefenting them, fo as to be diftributed, according to the ftocks, among all the agnatick branches, the half-blood and the maternal relations being wholly rejected. Thefe rules of defcent, which are concifely laid down in the book of Numbers, and fully explained in the Mijna, have the merit of extreme fimplicity; and are in truth no more than limitations to all the anceftors ifucceffively, and the heirs male of their bodies, with remainders to their iffue female, in the fame manner as the children of the perfon deceafed inherit his eftate, but without the fame regard to primogeniture.

At Athens, as well as at Jerufalem, the mother was excluded from the inheritance of her fon: this we learn from the fpeech on the eftate of Hagnias, where Theopompus mentions the claim fet up for the mother of the deceafed; a relation, he admits, the neareft of all by nature; but not recognifed by law amons the degrees of fucceffion; and he prevailed, accordingly, by the fuperior Atrength of his title. There is, indeed, another part of the fame fpeech, which might lead us at firft to imagine, that fhe was only poftponed to all the heirs on the paternal fide, and that fhe took an equal fhare with a brother of the half blood; but the preceding paffage is exprefs, that fhe was not admiffible to the inheritance ; and it may be remembered, that fhe bore a double relation to Hagnias, both as his mother and his fecond coufin; for fhe was the fifter of Stratius, and the foror confanguinea of Theopompus himfelf.

The Decemviral law, which feems in this inftance to have been borrowed from that of Solon, excluded mothers from the right of fucceffion

Ito their children; but this rigour was mitigated by the lenity of the Prætors, who fometimes gave relief, on the ground of proximity, by their edicts Unde Cognati; and Claudius Cæfar would not fuffer a mother to be deprived of the fimall confolation, which the fortune of her deceafed fon could afford her. It appears from the fpeech of Cicero for A. Cluentius, that, by the municipal law of Larinum, a borough-town of Italy, the poffeffions of Avitus would have gone to his mother Saffia, if he had died inteftate; but the law of the twelve tables prevailed at Rome, till after the fubverfion of the republick; the amendment of that unnatural frictnefs was begun by the juft-mentioned Emperor, promoted by the Senatus confultum Tertullianum in the time of Hadrian, and completed, with fome reafonable reftrictions, by the Juftinianean code.

Our ftatute of diftributions, which was penned by a civilian, and in fome meafure refembles the Roman law, gives the perfonal effects of inteftate, who die without wife or iffue, to his mother, as well as his father, in exclufion of their other children ; and the ftatute of James the Second, like the novel conftitutions, ordained, that the mother fhould take an equal fhare with the brothers and fifters, and the reprefentatives of them : but the principles of the feudal policy, from which our fyftem of real property was derived, made it impoffible for lineal anceftors to inherit; and, although our Henry the Firft, like the Emperor Claudius, reftored the right of fucceffion in the afcending line, yet the old rigour ftill prevails in England, as the fame rule, drawn from the fame fource, obtains alfo in France. Whether a fimilar maxim was adopted by the ancient Arabs, to whofe military inftitutions it feems agreeable, I have no certain knowledge ; few monuments of that people remaining, except their wild fongs on the fubjects of love and war; but Mabomed exprefsly ordered, that "even if a man left a child, his parents " fhould have each of them a fixth part of hịs " poffeffions; that, if he died childlefs, his mo" ther fhould take a third part, or if he had " brethren, a fixth, after payment of his debts " and legacies:" as a reaion for this ordinance he adds, " You know not whether your parents " or your children confer upon you the greater " benefit." The fucceffion of afcendants might have been repugnant to the very effence of feuds; but our laws would have been more natural, as well as convenient, if the tranfmiffion of all property had been directed by nearly the fame rules, and the diftinction between lands and goods had been left to philofophical analyfts and fpeculative lawyers.

The maxim in Littleton prohibited only the lineal afcent of an inheritance; but at Athens the collateral afcendants alfo were excluded from the fucceffion; and this appears to have been the reafon, why, if no teftamentary guardian had been appointed, the Archon ufually gave the guardianfhip of the infant heir to his uncle, in conformity to the law of Solon, which directed that none flould be nominated guardians, who would inberit the eftate on the death of the minor; an ordinance, which confirms the wifdom of our common law. When the heir had feveral uncles, the magiftrate chofe one of them according to his difcretion: thus Dinias was appointed guardian to his nephews, the grandfons of Polyarchus; for, although on failure of their paternal and maternal kinfmen within the limited degrees, he might by poffibility have fucceeded jure agnationis, yet fo remote a contingency was not confidered; and guardians are exprefsly named by the old grammarians among the znswsais or diftant relations, by whom Phænops complains in Homer that his poffeffions would be divided, fince his two fons, Xanthus and Thoön, had perifhed in battle. Arifomenes, for the fame reafon, was nominated guardian to his brother's children; and here we may take occafion to illuftrate or correct the rule as to the marriage of heireffes to their neareft kinfmen, who, if they bad not been living, would have inherited the eftate; for the orator fays, that Ariftomenes had the option either to take bis niece himfelf or demand her in marriage for his fon ; fince if the had been dead, the fortune of Ariftarchus would have devolved upon him, Cyronides having been previoufly emancipated : but no fmall difficulty arifes from the fecond fpeech, in which it is faid more than once, that, if Phila had been a legitimate child, and neither of her coufins would have married her, fhe might have been claimed by Lyfimenes, or Pylades, or Chæron, who, if they were the maternal uncles of Pyrrhus, as I firft imagined, could not poffibly have been his heirs, and, if they were his paternal uncles, muft have been poftponed to all his kinfmen, as far as the fecond coufins, both on his father's and on his mother's fide ; fo that we muft fuppofe, either that he had no fuch kinfmen, or that the rule before laid down is erroneous, and that an heirefs might be claimed by her relation in the neareft degree, whether he could have inherited the eftate or not.

The perpetual exclufion of the maternal uncle from the right of fucceffion, would naturally induce the Archon to appoint him guardian to his fifter's fon; but if any juft exception could be made to him by the mother herfelf or any other friend, he might certainly be fuperfeded:
thus Diocles, a man accufed of the blackeft crimes, obtained the guardianfhip of his nephew, by intimidating his fifter, and preventing her from oppofing his claim; but Thudippus, who had been at variance with his brother Euthycrates, and was even fufpected of having occafioned his death, was not thought a fit perfon to manage the affairs of young Aftypbilus, whom the magiftrate therefore committed to the care of his father-in-law Theophraftus.

In the fourth fpeech we fee this delicate and important office given to Dicæogenes III. who moft infamoufly abufed his truft, and who, if his father Proxenus was really uncle to the deceafed, muft have been proprior Jobrinus, or oncle à la mode de Bretagne, as the French exprefs that relation, or Welch uncle, as we fometimes call it, to his ward Cephifodotus and the other complainants; whence it may be inferred, that he was not within the degrees of fucceffion; but this point I cannot determine with politive certainty.

Among other articles of a guardian's duty at Athens, he was required by the law to let the eftate of the minor to the beft advantage, taking good fecurity from the leffees for the payment of the rents; for which purpofe the guardian prefented a petition, and a jury was chofen to eftablifh by their verdiat the propriety of the tranfaction: but a very remarkable paffage in the fifth fpeech of Ifæus, fhows how negligently this duty was performed ; for, when the affociates of Alce, who had a complete afcendant over old Euctemon, falfely fet forth in their petition, that her two baftards were the adopted fons of Philoctemon and Ergamenes, and that they were teftamentary guardians of the infants, praying that their eftates might be let to farmers, the court nut only neglected to call for proofs of thofe allegations, but proceeded as of courfe, and would actually have delivered the property of Chæreftratus to a vile fet of impoftors, if fome of his friends had not feafonably been informed of the confederacy. It is probable, indeed, that, when the proclamation was made, the crier called upon all perfons interefted, to fhow caufe why the land or houfes fhould not be let; but they fhould have had longer notice ; and the whole paffage is fo difficult, that the more I reflect on the nature and confequences of fuch a confpiracy, the lefs I underftand, how it could uhtimately have availed the confpirators; nor is it poffible, that fuch a tranfaction could long have been kept fecret at Athens, where fo flagrant an infult on publick juftice would have been punifhed with the laft feverity. Heraldus, who of all modern juriits has made the beft ufe of Lææus, comments at large on this paffage, but expreffes fome little doubt of its true meaning: his interpretation, however, coincides in general with mine ; and I incline to agree alfo with Petit, who conceives that the eftates of minors were let in the month of September, or the beginning of the Attick year, when the old leafes ufually expired; at which time, as he afferts, the courts of juftice were fupplied with their proper complement of jurymen, whence he explains the words of my author, " as foon as the courts were full," which Heraldus tranflates, proximis judicios et frequenti foro. I may add, that a fentence in the eighth book of Pollux favours the notion of Petit; but the inveftigation of thefe minute points belongs properly to notes.

It appears from many paffages of my author, as well as from the elegant fpeech of Lyfias againft Diogiton, and the known cafe of Demofthenes himfelf, how frequently and fcandaloufly the Athenian guardians injured their wards: thus Archedamus, who affifted APOLLODORUS as his advocate and advifer, gained two decrees by a great majority againft Eupolis, who had defrauded his nephew of above fix hundred pounds; while the conduct of Dicæogenes and of Diocles was ftill more iniquitous. At the age of fixteen a ward might compel his guardian to account by a fuit brought in his own name; and Demofthenes proceeded againft Aphobus in his feventeenth year; but it feems to have been doubtful, whether, during his minority, he could have maintained a civil action againft his guardian for an eftate, to which he was entitled; for, when Theopompus complained that he was cruelly and unneceffarily haraffed with an sisayiExio or publick profecution, and urged, as an argument in his favour, that the friends of young Stratocles had not regularly claimed his moiety of the inheritance, they anfwered, that a minor could not bring a civil action againft bis guardian: this he denied, and challenged them to produce the law, by which fuch an action was forbidden; nor does there feem, indeed, any good reafon for fuch a prohibition. Had it been really as they contended, yet Theopompus intimated an ingenious mode of obtaining juftice: "let a petition, fays he, " be prefented to the Archon, that the eftate " may be let to farm, and then will the leffee " have a right to commence a fuit againft me, " if I refufe to give him poffeffion."
VI. As Hagnias in fact died childlefs, his brothers, the fons of Polemo, would have inherited his poffeffions together, and their children would have fucceeded to the fbares of their father's, by the exprefs words of Solon, to the exclufion, I imagine, of the fifters; and, if none of his brothers or their children had been living, the fifters would have been called to the fucceffion; but, as the legiflator has not faid that the children of fifters fhould fucceed to the fhares of their mothers, it is natural to conclude, that they took in capita; and this is the only way, in which I am able to folve the difficulty in the fpeech on the eftate of Philoctemon, where it appears that Androcles claimed the widow of Chæreas with a fifth part of the inheritance; for fhe would have been entitled to a greater thare as heirefs either of her father or of her brothers, unlefs we fuppofe, that the property of Euctemon was divided in equal proportion among the two fifters and their tbree children. Had Phanoftratus and his wife been dead, leaving only one fon, and had the other fifter been fingle or childlefs, the eftates of her brothers, dying inteftate and without iffue, would have gone in moieties to Chæreftratus and his aunt, according to the cafe of Thrafybulus, who took an equal fhare with the wife of Pronapis, of the fortune left by his uncle the fon of Eupolis; but it feems probable, that if the wife of ef chines had been alive, fhe would have been entitled to a tbird part of the inheritance.

Thus, on the death of DIC®OGENES, his four fifters and all their children feem to have had a title to equal portions of his eftate; for Menexenus and Cephifodotus are faid exprefsly to have claimed the fame fhare with their coufin, who fpoke in the caufe, and whofe fifter (for I adopt the emendation propofed by Reifke) is alfo faid to have been entitled equally with her mother. Thefe rights were varioufly blended by the intermarriages of the firf coufins; and here it may be obferved, that a brother was permitted at Athens, as we learn from the feventh fpeech of Ifrus, to marry the daughter of his father, not of his mother; but I recollect no Athenian law by which a man was reftrained from marrying the fifter of his wife, a contract forbidden by the Alcoran, and commonly fuppofed to be prohibited by the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus: my opinion on that fubject, which I have had no reafon to change, has already been made publick by my much-lamented friend Mr. ALLEYNE, whofe virtues, learning, and talents promifed no lefs honour to himfelf than advantage to his country. We might here enumerate thirty cafes, in which the poffeffions of a perfon deceafed were diftributable at Athens to his fons or daughters, brothers or fifters, or their children, feverally or in concurrence; but, if a diftinction be made between thofe who claim through females and thofe who derive their title through males, the number will amount to ninety-fix; and in all the poffible cafes, the refpective claims may, I think, eafily be adjufted by the help of the preceding rules.

VII. I now proceed to the coufins of Hagnias, and muft begin with remarking, that Solon made an effential difference between them and the lineal defcendants of a perfon deceafed, or his brothers and fifters and their children; for the preference to males and the iffue of males was applied to coufins only, and $M$. Auger is certainly miftaken in fuppofing that nieces or the children of nieces were poftponed to nephews or their fons. The grammarian, who wrote the Greek arguments to Ifrus, fell into the fame error; although the diftinction is fully explained by the orator himfelf in the fixth fpeech; where he fays, " that the law gives "the fifter and the fifter's fon an equal fhare " of their father's and their brother's fortune: " but that when a coufin dies, or any kinfman " in a remoter degree, the male relations are " called to the fucceffion before the female; for " it is enacted, that males and the children of " males, if any be living, fhall be preferred, al" though they are lefs nearly related to the de" ceafed." The children, therefore, of Ciron's daughter had a better title than his nephew, whether he was a brother's or a fifter's fon ; and the fine reafoning of Ifrus on that point was, indeed, as he intimates himfelf, almoft fuperVOL, VII.
fluous; but the fifter of Stratius II. who ftood in the fame degree of relation to Hagnias with Theopompus, was wholly excluded from the fucceffion: thus, if APOLLODORUS had died without having appointed an heir, his eftate would have defcended to Thrafybulus, his firft coufin once removed, in preference to the wife of Pronapis, who was nearer by one degree; but as he waived his right and admitted the adoption of Thrafyllus, the female coufin and her hufband fet up a claim to the inheritance.

The Attick laws preferved by Demofthenes, and the recitals of them in Ifæus, mutually correct and explain each other: thas the law of inheritances in the fpeech againft Macartatus is fupplied by the opening of the fpeech on the eftate of Hagnias; and the paffage above cited from my author muft be amended from the compofition of his immortal pupil, by adding the words provided that they belong to the fame branch; on which provifo the title of young Eubulides folely depended. M. Auger has tranflated this paffage in the following manner: " males and the children of males fhall have the " preference, provided that they ftand in the " fame degree, and be not farther removed;" but he unqueftionably mifunderfood it ; and the article of fucceffions, indeed, is the leaft perfect of any in his valuable work.

Few words in the Greek and Latin languages are more vague than thofe, which exprefs the different relations of divivions or coufinage; but I muft leave a precife interpretation of them to philologers, and be contented here with obferving, that, in Ifæus and Demofhenes, aveswol always mean the fons of brothers and fifters, or firft coufins, whofe children, or the fecond coufins, were called $\alpha v \varepsilon \psi \dot{x} \delta 0$ i by the Athenians, and by the Romans, fobrini; which laft relation both Eubulides II. by his father Philager, and the three fons of Charidemus, bore to Hagnias, whofe property was in difpute. A frft coufin once removed was alfo diftinguifhed by the name of $\alpha v \varepsilon \dot{\psi}$ ASTYPHILUS were firf coufins; and the fon of Cleon was diveqradass to the deceafed, but not, I believe, converfely; although the fons of Aftyphilus and of Cleon would have been reciprocally $\dot{\alpha} v \varepsilon \dot{\psi}, \delta_{0}$; to each other. The attentive reader muft have anticipated my remark, that Cleon would have been heir at law to his firft coulin, if his father Thudippus had not been adopted by another family; and this was the title of Hagnon and Hagnotheus to the eftate of NICOSTRATUS : thus, on the death of Hagnias, the fon of his aunt Phylomache was entitled to the fucceffion; for, although he derived his relation to the deceafed through a female, yet

Theopompus, who claimed wholly through males, belonged to a different brancb or family, namely, to that of Stratius I.; and Wolfius, as Perizonius obferves, was miftaken in fuppofing that Theopompus had the better title. Had a brother of Polemo, indeed, left a fon, he would have excluded Eubulides, and not only he, but bis fon too, although in a remoter degree, would have been preferred. On failure of firt coufins and their children, the Jecond coufins on the father's fide were admitted to the inheritance, which they took, as in their own right, in capita; although the firft coufins once removed would have taken in firpes, as reprefenting their fathers: fo Theopompus, Stratocles, Stratius, Eubulides, and Meneftheus, would have fucceeded to fifth parts of the eftate, the daughter of Calliftratus being rejected, as well as Stratonides, the fon of Oenanthe; but Theopompus, the only furviving fecond coufin, would have been entitled to the whole, if Eubulides had not borne a double relation to Hagnias, one part of which Ifæus very artfully fuppreffes. As to the claim fet up by the fon of Stratocles, it feems to have been incapable of fupport; for, although there be fome little variation in the different copies of the law, yet we may fafely conclude, that the children of fecond coufins were not within the legal degrees of fucceffion; and fo the court at Athens determined, for Theopompus died in poffeffion of the whole fortune.

No fecond coufins being alive, the half-blood was admitted in the fame order; that is, the brothers and fifters, nephews and nieces, on the mother's fide, or, on failure of them, the firft coufins and their children, and, laftly, the fecond coufins, but no farther; for, if no maternal kinfmen exifted within thofe degrees, the agnati, or next of kin on the paternal fide, were the heirs at law ; and their proximity was traced by counting the degrees from the common anceftor: thus, if Theopompus too had been gone, the half-brother Glauco would have fucceeded; or, he being dead without iffue, the maternal firft coufins or iffue of Stratius II. and, perhaps, of Theopompus and Stratocles. I muft here again mention a moft difficult paffage in the tenth fpeech, to which I before alluded. It is there faid exprefsly, that, " if Glauco had relinquifhed " his claim, the mother of bim and of Hagnias " might then have juftly entered into litigation " for the property of her fon; and, as fhe would " have difputed with perfons by no means ad" miffible to the fucceffion, fhe would clearly " have obtained a fentence for the moiety, both " law and natural juftice confpiring in her fa" vour." Now the mother of Hagnias was his fecond coufin on the father's fide ; and, as fuch, would have been entitled to his inheritance on failure of males in the fame degree, to the exclufion, as one would have imagined, of the half-blood: how then could her fon Glauco have claimed before her? What occafion had fhe to wait for a waiver of his right? Was a female paternal fecond coufin poitponed to a frater uterinus by the words of the law, which gave a preference to males? The more I confider this paffage, the more it perplexes me; and I have not yet found any fatisfactory folution of the difficulty.

I will clofe this fection with obferving, that, if the preceding interpretation of the laws be right, and males were only preferred in the fame branch, the title of the fecond Phylomache was better than that of Theopompus, who muft, therefore, as Demofthenes afferts, have gained a verdict in his favour by fome contrivance or furprife.
VIII. I have all along proceeded on a fuppofition that the heirs of a perfon deceafed were legitimate children, who are defined by the firft Attick law to be thofe born in wediock of a woman duly betrothed; but the thirteenth law, which excluded baftards from the fucceffion to facred or civil rigbts, muft have been re-enacted after the time of Solon, who was appointed legiflator one hundred and eighty years before the archon-fhip or Euclid. We have already obferved that his laws were made only for a century, and, though they were all perpetuated by Diocles, yet that concerning baftards is faid to have been revived by Pericles and Aritophon, who added to the definition of legitimacy, that both parents muft be citizens; and this point we fee carefully proved in the fragment of the fpeech for Euphiletus. The laws of the Greek iflands, however, feem to have differed in this refpect from thofe of Athens; for in Ægina, as we learn from Ifocrates, the illegitimate fifter of Thrafylochus inftituted a fuit againft his devifee, who, inftead of refting his defence on her inability to inherit, was fatisfied with proving the will, and difcourfing at large on the friendfhip which had fubfifted between him and the deceafed.

I come now to the fecond part of my commentary, in which I propofed to explain the modes of appointing an heir among the Athenians, on failure of natural heirs or lineal defcendants.
I. Frequent mention is made by the Grecian orators of defolate beritages, as they are called by ISAIAH: now a family was confidered as ${ }^{\circ} \%$ y-pier of an eftate left no fon by nature or by appointment, who might perform holy rites at his tomb, preferve his race, and, by tranfmitting his name to a perpetual chain of fucceffors, confer on him a kind of immortality. As this idea mu have been extremely pleafing to men, whofe views of a better life were rather faint glimmerings of hope than well-founded expectations, they were very early indulged with the power of adopting fons: hence, as Ifæus obferves in the fixth fpeech, " all they, who thought " their end approaching, took a provident care " that their families might not become extinct; 's and if they had no heirs by birth, yet they left "fons at leaft by adoption." The prefervation of names might have been one reafon for the preference given to males in the Attick laws of fucceffion; and it is very remarkable, that, both in Hebrew and Arabick, the word for a male implies remembrance, and that for a female, oblivion; but this diftinction would not have exifted, if it had been enacted, that the hufband of an heirefs fhould either affume the name of her anceftor, or give it to one of his fons: even in our own country, and in very modern times, we fee a number of devifes to men on condition that they take the names of the devifors, or to women, provided that they marry perfons of a particular name; fuch has been the fondnefs of mankind, in moft ages and nations, for the jingle of empty founds! At Athens children were named on the tenth day after they were born, as on the luftrical day of the Romans; and male infants, as we fee in the pedigree of Hagnias, ufually received the names of their grandfathers, or fome compounds of them, a method recommended in the laws of Plato. Thus one would have thought, that the fon of Oenanthe fhould have been called Cleocritus, and that the name of Stratonides fhould have been given to a grandfon of Stratius; but parents were at liberty to impofe names as they pleafed; and Sofitheus in Demofthenes mentions the motives which induced him to call his four fons, Sofias, Eubulides, Meneftheus, and Calliftratus. Female children alfo were frequently named after their grandmothers: thus the name of Phylomache defcended to her grand-daughter; and the uncles of PYRRHUS afferted, that he gave his daughter Phila the name of his own mother Clitareta, which would have been a ftrong argument for her legitimacy. This cuftom was ufeful in keeping the branches of a family diftinct, efpecially as males were preferred only in the fame branch ; and it was forcibly urged againft Theopompus, that neither his brethren nor his anceftors bore the name of Hagnias, or of Eubulides, nor any fimilar to them, fuch as Hagnon, Hagnotheus, or Eubulus; while the other two branches were equally clear of any name like that of Stratius, from whom he defcended: it may be worth while to add, that a change of names often took place at Rome, as M. Brutus, who had been adopted by his uncle, is named Q. Cæpio Brutus in a decree of the fenate; but it was ufual, on fome occafions, to alter the termination only, as Octavius, after the death of his adopter C. Cæfar, was called Octavianus; and, for a fimilar reafon, one Cicero's letters is addreffed to T. Pamponianus Atticus.

The publick intereft alfo was greatly concerned in preventing the defolation of heritages; for it was expedient, that eftates, which contributed to defray the general expenfes, fhould be preferved as long as poffible; and this mode was preferable in a free government to the laws of efcheats and fifcal claims to vacant inheritances: hence we find, that SOLON directed the chief magiftrate to prevent the total extinction of families; and hence, if a man died inteftate and childlefs, it was incumbent on the next heir to emancipate one of his own fons or near relations, and appoint him, by a kind of adoption, fon to the deceafed, together with his name and a confiderable portion of his eftate. Thus, on the death of Apollodorus the fon of Eupolis, one of his fifters ought to have given her own fon both his name and part of his fortune; but, as this duty was neglected by the wives of Pronapis and Æefchines, their firft coufin took care to adopt Thrafyllus, whilf he lived; and the fpeech on the eftate of APOLLODORUS is fo clear and full a commentary on this method of adoption during life, that it were quite fuperfluous to write more diffufely on the fubject: a few obfervations, however, may be added without impropriety.

Both at Athens, as we learn from Ifrus, and at Rome, as A. Gellius informs us, an adopted fon acquired all the rights, both facred and civil, and fucceeded to all the advantages and burdens, of the new family into which he was introduced; nor was he confidered in any other light than that of a fon by nature born in lawful wedlock, whence the orator afks, " how Philocte" mon could have died without a child, when " he had actually adopted his nephew;" but all pretenfions whatever to the inheritance of his natural father were wholly loft by adoption or emancipation: thus Cleon was firft coufin to ASTYPHILUS, but as his father had been adopted by another perfon, he no longer bore any relation to the deceafed; yet, if Thudippus had left a fon in the houfe of his adopter, and returned, as he lawfully might, into his ancient family, and if Cleon had been born after that return, either he or his fon would have been heir to Aftyphilus, in preference to the half-brother. A maternal inheritance, indeed, was not lof by adoption; for the father only was changed: fo, when Thrafybulus was adopted by Hippolochides, he ftill retained and afferted his title to the eftate of his mother's brother, a moiety of which he actually received; and he would lave taken, as male coufin, the whole fortune of Apollodorus, if the adoption of Thrafyllus had been illegal.

When the adopted fon died without children, and confequently without having returned to his natural family, the poffeffions of the adopter defcended to his right heirs; as, on the deceafe of Endius, the fifter of PYRRHUS demanded and obtained his eftate, the illegitimacy of Phila and the legality of the adoption being clearly proved : had Phila been legitimate, it appears from the pleadings in the caufe, that an adverfe poffeffion of twenty years would not have barred her title ; and we muft fuppofe, that the limitation of five years related only to actions brought, and not to proteftations or entries made by lineal defcendants, who took poffeffion, if they pleafed, without inftituting a fuit for their inheritance. The fpeech of Demofthenes, in the caufe between Ariftodemus and Leochares, contains a great deal of curious learning concerning adoptions; for the principal queftion was, whether on adopted fon could himfelf adopt another, and the argument of Demofthenes, who maintained the negative, was in fubfance this: "An adopted "fon cannot devife the property acquired by " adoption, for Solon gave the power of devifing " only to unadopted citizens; he cannot, there"fore, by adopting a fon, give him a right to " the fame property, for a devife is in fact a " fpecies of adoption, and both kinds were pro" hibited together; befides, there cannot be two " adopted fons at the fame time; and the law " permits the return of the firf in one cafe only, " that is, when he leaves a legitimate fon of his " Own in the family of the perfon who adopted "him." As to the other queftion, who was heir at lare to Archiades, there was no kind of diffculty in it; for the complainant defcended from a brotber, and was therefore preferred by the exprefs words of the law to the iffue of a fifler; but how Ariftoteles could be confidered as heir to Leocrates, who was related to him in the ninth degree of the civilians, I am at a lofs to determine: there are many other dar's paffages in the fpeech, which I leave to the interpreters of Demofthenes, it being my fole bufinefs at prefent to illuftrate Ifæus. One thing only I may remark with $M$. Auger; that no objection was taken to the adoption of Leocrates, becaufe the fuppofed adopter had never been married; and I at firft thought with him, that the adopted fon muft necefarily bave been a genuine citizen; but the fragment in defence of Euphiletus feems to prove, that foreigners were fometimes adopted, unlefs we fuppofe, as I think we may, that Ifæus was there fpeaking of fuppofititious, not of adopted, fons. The true end and effential conditions of an adoption at Rome are explained with admirable perfpicuity by Cicero, in his noble fpeech for the reftitution of bis Palatine houfe, in which he proves that Clodius had been illegally adopted: it appears from that whole bufinefs, that a Roman, properly qualified in other refpects, might adopt a man of a different rank from himfelf; but fuch an adoption, it feems, was forbidden by the laws of FEina and Siphnus, either during life or by teftament, whence Ifocrates takes pains to fhow, that the devifee of Thrafylochus was a citizen inferiour to none of the Sipbnians, and educated in the fame manner with his friend.
II. The power of devifing property, which SOLON introduced at Athens but two hundred years before the birth of Demofthenes, is next to be confidered; and the preceding fpeeches evidently fhow how much litigation and impofture followed the introduction of it ; an objection, indeed, which lies in fome degree againft the laws of fucceffion ; for, when NICOSTRATUS was dead, there appeared no fewer than feven falfe claimants of his eftate by a variety of fictitious titles. I cannot afcribe the deftruction of Athenian liberty to this alteration made in the ancient law, and am inclined to doubt the fact of its having produced exceffive wealth in fome citizens, whilf others were impoverifhed: there are many inftances in the Greek orators of perfons, who had fucceeded, as heirs, to feveral eftates ; but the difadvantages and odium, which attended an excefs of riches, were confiderably greater at Athens than the benefits or pleafure arifing from affluence. Various caufes contributed to the fubverfion of the Athenian fate: had Philip never exifted, or been lefs ambitious, had Hyperides and Demofhenes underftood the art of war as well as that of rhetorick, had the gold of Perfia and Macedonia been lefs powerful, and the abettors of tyranny lefs affiduous, Athens might have continued to flourifh in fplendour and freedom, whether Solon's inftitution had taken place, or the former ftrictnefs had prevailed. Plutarch, indeed, whofe judgement is highly to be refpected, afcribes the decline of the Spartan government to a fimilar relaxation of the old feverity by the law of Epitadeus, which permitted a devife of lands or goods from the natural heir, in oppofition to the ordinance of LYCURGUS, which prohibited any alienation of them; and he imputes even the propofal of fuch a law to a motive of refent-ment or of covetoufnefs; for Epitadeus, fays he, was a proud feditious man, and had quarrelled bitterly with his own fon; but the permiffion given by him to alien an eftate at all, and not merely to leave it by will, was the evil of which the hiftorian complains; for, when moft of the inheritances in Lacedæmon had been transferred from the lawful heirs, there remained only feven hundred genuine citizens, among whom not more than one hundred were in poffeffion of lands : yet, if the Athenian filver had not found its way into Sparta, the law would have been innocent, although lefs expedient in a military, than in a commercial, nation.

Whether the law of Solon was politick or not, it had the merit of concifenefs and fimplicity, and the ftudent may not be difpleafed to compare it with the ftatute of our Henry the Eighth, who certainly was not a Solon : but it would be foreign from my defign to difcourfe upon it at large, much lefs to fubjoin a treatife on devifes, or to analyfe every word in the wellknown definition of Modeftinus. So many books have been written upon wills by civilians and common lawyers, that the fubject is almoft exhaufted, and the paffages in my author, where mention is made of them, are fo clear as to require very little explanation : it will be fufficient, therefore, to conclude this commentary, as I at firft propofed, with a few remarks on the execution and revocation of an Athenian will. I have already obferved, that the appointment of an heir by a man's laft teftament was regarded at Athens as a mode of adopting a fon; and of this teftamentary adoption, for fo the Greek orators call it, we have feveral examples in Ifrus: thus the devife of $P$ biloctemon is treated all along as an adoption; but his power to devife or adopt in the lifetime of his father is fomewhat queftionable, fince in fact he nominated a reprefentative of himfelf as fon of Euctemon. His power, however, being admitted, let us examine the manner in which it was exercifed. We may take notice, in the firft place, that, although Cato the Cenfor repented of his having paffed a fingle day without a will, yet the old Athenians were not fo provident ; for they commonly deferred the execution of their wills, till they were impelled by the apprehenfion of fome approaching danger: thus, when Apollodorus was on the point of failing with the army to Corinth, he left his eftate, in cafe of his death, to the daughter of Archedamus; and it was argued by the fon of Theophraftus, that, fince Aftyphilus, who was a foldier by profeffion, had made no will before his campaigns in the Corintbian and Theban wars, it was very improbable that he fhould have chofen to make one, juft before his adven-

[^0]ture to Mitylene, in which he was lefs expofed to peril. Theopompus alfo, whofe bufinefs it was to infift, that Hagnias had devifed his fortune to Glauco, mentions, as a reafon why he devifed it at all, that be was preparing to fail on a publick embafy; and Philoctemon is faid to have adopted Chæreftratus by will, left he fhould perifh in one of his frequent expeditions by land or fea: if, in thefe cafes, poffeffion of the eftates had been given to the donees, they would have been complete donationes mortis caufa, many examples of which may be found in the ancient poets and hiftorians of Greece ; but they feem to have been regular devifes according to the law of Solon. The exprefs words of that law, as well as the common fenfe of mankind, required that a teftator fhould have the full enjoyment of his reafon and liberty, without which no inftrument executed by a man can with any propriety be called his will: thus it was contended, that Philoctemon's difpofition of his property was exactly agreeable to the law, fince he had no legitimate children, and had been advanced by his fellow-citizens to the higheft honours on account of his fuperiour talents ; and it was no uncommon dilemma, of which we have examples at the conclufion of the firft and eighth fpeeches, " that either no will at all had " been made by the deceafed, or that, if it had,
" it was invalid, fince he could not have difin" herited his relation, whom he always loved, " or adopted a perfon, whom he always ab" horred, without having loft his fenfes by the "effects of poifon or difeafe." From this /pecious mode of reafoning proceeded the Roman doctrine of inofficious teftaments, which were fet afide on a prefumption of infanity, or of fuch caprice as amounted to folly; thus the will of Ebbutius, who, having two daughters of equal merit, left his eftate to one of them exclufively of the other, was confidered as a proof of madnefs.

The power and underftanding of an Athenian teftator being indifputable, he wrote his will in the fimpleft and cleareft manner, and commonly in the following form: " Philoctemon the Ce"phifian made this teftament. If any accident " fhould befal me, and if my wife fhould not be " delivered of a child, I give all my eftate and " intereft to my nephew Chæreftratus, whom I " adopt as my fon; and I bequeath one talent " to my wife, together with my houfe at Ce"phifia." We may collect from a paffage in the eighth fpeech, that it was not abfolutely neceffary for a will to be attefted; it was ufual, however, to have witneffes, and prudent to convene as many friends and relations as could be affembled, in whofe prefence the will was acknowledged by the teftator, but the contents of it were feldom difclofed: it was then fealed up for the purpofe of fecrecy, and generally committed to the care of fome kinfman, who was not interefted in the deftruction of it, or whofe integrity was wholly unfufpected. Thus the teftament of old Euctemon was depofited with his friend Pythodorus, and that of his fon with his brother-in-law Chæreas; and the pretended will of Aftyphilus was faid to have been left in the cuftody of his uncle Hierocles; but the Athenian wills were fometimes placed, for greater fecurity, in one of the publick temples, a method frequent alfo at Rome ; and the will of Cleonymus was, probably, fecured in this manner, fince, when he wifhed to cancel it, he fent Pofidippus for the $\alpha=0$ care of all the great buildings at Athens. Notwithftanding thefe precautions, a number of forged wills were continually fet up ; and, notwithftanding the wife provifions of the law, as great a number were obtained by improper influence; but, though the profligacy of the Athenians has been afcribed to the form of their government, yet, if we confider the multitude of forgeries and impofitions of the fame kind, which almoft every circuit in England brings to light, we fhall be forced to confefs, that the people of Attica were profligate, not becaufe they had a popular government, but althougb they had it ; and we muft look for another fource of their wickednefs and of our own, which I conceive to be this; that, " in artificial fociety, " money foon acquires a value inconfiftent with " virtue and honeity."

There is a vein of juft reafoning on the evidence of wills in the fpeech on the eftate of $\mathrm{Ni}_{-}$ coftratus, whofe teftament, as well as that of Aftypbilus, appears to have been forged ; but he muft be an unfkilful advocate, who cannot make his own cafe plaufible ; and, as the arguments on the other fide are not extant, it is impoffible for us to decide the caufes with juftice: the fame may be obferved as to all the queftions of mere fact, which arife in the fpeeches of Ifæus; but fo many difinterefted witneffes, whofe depofitions are preferved by his pupil, confirm the pedigree of HAGNIAS, that it is equally impoffible for us to doubt the truth of it.

If PHILOCTEMON had adopted Chæreftratus in his life-time, an afterborn child would have been coheir with his adopted fon ; but he might have defired to leave his entire poffeffions to his own iffue ; and fuch an adoption would have been irrevocable, except for the moft weighty reafons, whilft a teftamentary appointment might be revoked at pleafure. The revocation of wills was ufually performed at Athens with great ceremony, and in the prefence of a magiftrate ; for thofe, with whom they had been depofited, would not furrender or unfeal them, except by the authority of the court, left they fhould at any time be charged with having altered them: hence Pythodorus refufed to give up the teftament of Euctemon, and, when he was called before the Archon, declared that he could have no wifh to detain it, but infifted, that, as Chæreas was prefent, when Euctemon committed the will to his charge, and as an infant daughter of Chæreas was living, whofe interefts might be affected by the revocation of it, he was authorized to keep it, until her guardian or huiband could fecure him from any trouble on her account ; and the court approved of his caution; but the will was revoked, it feems, by the publick declaration of Euctemon, that it was no longer valid.

The feech on the eftate of Cleonymus clearly fhows the formality with which a teftament was refcinded; and the queftion on the virtual revocation is difcuffed with elegance; nor could Ifæus be eafily anfwered, if the attual revocation was in truth prevented by the contrivance of the devifees, from which both reafon and juftice would have forbidden them to derive advantage. I have hitherto purpofely abftained from citing Englifb cafes on the important fubw ject of devifes and revocations, becaufe I wifhed to avoid even the appearance of profeffional oftentation, and becaufe the books, in which they may be read, are on the fhelves of every ftudent, who will find it an agreeable exercife to confider how thefe Athenian caufes would have been decided at Weftminfter; but I cannot help alluding to the cafe of Burton and Gowell in the thirty-fifth year of Elizabeth, where a man executed a devife at Pulham, and afterwards lying fick at Sterfon, faid, " my will made at "Pulhain Jball not ftand," and it was holden that thefe words revoked the will, becaufe the verb apparently future denoted a prefent refolution, but a declaration of a future intention would not have been fufficient: fuch words, however, fpoken in private, would not have amounted to a revocation at Athens, any more than with us after the ftatute of frauds.

Before I conclude this commentary, I muft take notice of a few circumftances in one or two of the fpeeches; and, firft, of a paffage in that juft mentioned, where Polyarchus is faid to have directed, that, " if his fon Cleonymus died " without iffue, the eftate fhould go to his grand"fons:" now, if this direction had been contained in a will of the grandfather, Cleonymus could hardly have been empowered to deprive the perfons in remainder of their intereft, fince the Athenians had not even an idea of eftatestail by implication, much lefs of recoveries by which thofe entails might be barred; we muft, therefore, fuppofe that this was only a defire or recommendation of Polyarchus, which his fon might legally, although not very decently, difregard. Next, it may be remarked, that, in the real teftament of Philoctemon and in the pretended one of Hagnias, we may difcover the rudiments of thofe fubfitutions, which form fo large a part of our modern fyftems: Hagnias is fuppofed to have devifed his property to his niece, and, after her death, to his half-brother Glauco, who, when fhe died, entered upon the eftate by virtue of the remainder, which had been vefted in him; but fuch limitations were, I believe, uncommon among the Athenians, whofe jurifprudence was not entangled with the fubtile doctrine of contingent and vefted interefts, or the multitude of perplexing queftions, to which the capricious fancy of teftators, with a little help from conveyancers, has conftantly given birth in England; nor would the ancient courts have fuffered juftice to be impeded by the technical niceties which confined our countrymen, to whom devifes, on their firft introduction, appeared, they faid, of a marvellous nature; and a fingle queftion, in the caufe of Curius and Coponius, which the Roman tribunal decided juitly in one day, was agitated in our courts for near forty years. I check myfelf on the profpect of the vaft field, into which this fubject would lead me, remembering, that it is the fole duty of a commentator to illuftrate his author ; and the fpeeches of ISEUS are made, I flatter myfelf, fufficiently clear by the preceding obfervations; although, I confefs, that fome few clouds and dark places are left in them, which more leifure than my late engagements have permitted me to enjoy, might perhaps have enabled me to difperfe and elucidate. I am fully fenfible, that deep refearches into the legal antiquities of Greece and Rome are of greater ufe to fcholars and contemplative perfons, than to lawyers and men of bufinefs; that Bracton and Littleton, Coke and Rolle, are the proper objects of our fudy; and that, if a client were to afk his counfel whether he had an eftate for life or in tail, he would receive little fatisfaction from being told, that, whatever eftate he had, he might devife it by the law of Solon, provided the devifee took his daughter in marriage ; but the ableft advocates and wifeft judges have frequently embellifhed their arguments with learned allufions to ancient cafes; and fuch allufions, it muft be allowed, are often ufeful, always ornamental ; and, when they are introduced without pedantry, never fail to pleafe. So delightful, indeed, is the ftudy of laws, general and particular, ancient and modern, Afiatick and European, that even the fine arts are not more alluring ; and it is with pleafure, as well as firmnefs, that I adopt the refolution of CICERO, which cannot be more forcibly or concifely expreffed than in the very words of his letter to Varro: "Mihi hæc videntur-fi nemo utetur " operâ, tamen et foribere et legere woinsias, et fir " minùs in curià atque in foro, at in literis et " libris, ut doctiffimi veteres fecerunt, navare "rempublicam, et de moribus ac legibus quæ" rere."

SACONTALA;  OR,

THE FATAL RING:

AN

TRANSLATED FROM THE ORIGINAL SANSCRIT AND PRACRIT.

PREFACE.

IIN one of the letters which bear the title of edifying, though moft of them fwarm with ridiculous errours, and all muft be confulted with extreme diffidence, I met, fome years ago, with the following paffage: "In the north of India " there are many books, called Nátac, which, " as the Bráhmens affert, contain a large portion " of ancient hiftory without any mixture of fa" ble;" and having an eager defire to know the real ftate of this empire before the conqueft of it by the Savages of the North, I was very folicitous, on my arrival in Bengal, to procure accefs to thofe books, either by the help of tranflations, if they had been tranflated, or by learning the language in which they were originally compofed, and which I had yet a ftronger inducement to learn from its connection with the adminiftration of juftice to the Hindûs ; but when I was able to converfe with the Bráhmens, they affured me that the Natacs were not hiftories, and abounded with fables; that they were extremely popular works, and confifted of converfations in profe and verfe, held before ancient Rajás in their publick affemblies, on an infinite variety of fubjects, and in various dialects of India: this definition gave me no very diftinct idea; but I concluded that they were dialogues on moral or literary topicks; whillt other Eu-ropeans, whom I confulted, had underfood from the natives that they were difcourfes on dancing, mufick, or poetry. At length a very fenfible Bráhmen, named Rádhácánt, who had long been attentive to Englifh manners, removed all my doubts, and gave me no lefs delight than furprife, by telling me that our nation had compofitions of the fame fort, which were publickly reprefented at Calcutta in the cold feafon, and bore the name, as he had been informed, of plays. Refolving at my leifure to read the beft. of them, I afked which of their Nátacs was moft univerfally efteemed; and he anfwered without hefitation, Sacontalá, fupporting his opinion, as ufual among the Pandits, by a couplet to this effect: "The ring of Sacontala, in which the " fourth act, and four ftanzas of that act, are " eminently brilliant, difplays all the rich exu"berance of Cálidafa's genius." I foon procured a correct copy of it ; and, affifted by my teacher Rámalóchan, began with tranflating it verbally into Latin, which bears fo great a refemblance to Sanfcrit, that it is more convenient than any modern language for a fcrupulous interlineary verfion: I then turned it word for word into Englifh, and afterwards, without adding or fuppreffing any material fentence, difengaged it from the fliffnefs of a foreign idiom, and prepared the faithful tranflation of the Indian drama, which I now prefent to the publick as a moft pleafing and authentick picture of old Hindit manners, and one of the greateft curiofities that the literature of Afia has yet brought to light.

Dramatick poetry muft have been immemorialiy ancient in the Indian empire : the invention of it is commonly afcribed to Bheret, a fage believed to have been infpired, who invented allo a fyftem of mufick which bears his name; but this opinion of its origin is rendered very doubtful by the univerfal belief, that the firft Sanferit verfe ever heard by mortals was pronounced in a burft of refentment by the great Valmic, who flourifhed in the filver age of the world, and was author of an Epick Poem on the war of his contemporary, Rama, king of Ayódhyà ; fo that no drama in verfe could have been reprefented before his time; and the Indians have a wild ftory, that the firf regular play, on the fame fubject with the Ramáyan, was compofed by Hanumat or Pávan, who commanded an army of Satyrs or Mountaineers in Ráma's expedition againft Lancà : they add, that he engraved it on a fmooth rock, which, being diffatisfied with his compofition, he hurled into the fea; and that, many years after, a learned prince ordered expert divers to take impreffions of the poem on wax, by which means the drama was in great meafure reftored; and my Pandit affures me that he is in poffeffion of it. By whomfoever or in whatever age this fpecies of entertainment was invented, it is very certain, that it was carried to great perfection in its kind, when Vicramáditya, who reigned in the firft century before Chrift, gave encouragement to poets, philologers, and mathematicians, at a time when the Britons were as unlettered and unpolifhed as the army of Hanumat: nine men of, genius, commonly called the nine gems, attended his court, and were fplendidly fupported by his bounty; and Cálidás is unanimoufly allowed to have been the brighteft of them. - A modern epigram was lately repeated to me, which does fo much honour to the author of Sacontala, that I cannot forbear exhibiting a literal verfion of it: "Po" etry was the fportful daughter of Válmic, and, " having been educated by Vyáfa, fhe chofe Cá" lidás for her bridegroom after the manner of " Viderbha: fhe was the mother of Amara, Sun" dar, Sanc'ha, Dhanic ; but now, old and de" crepit, her beauty faded, and her unadorned "feet flipping as fhe walks, in whofe cottage " does the difdain to take fhelter?"

All the other works of our illuftrious poet, the Shakefpeare of India, that have yet come to my knowledge, are a fecond play, in five acts, entitled Urvasí ; an heroic poem, or rather a feries of poems in one book, on the Children of the Sun; another, with perfect unity of action, on the Birth of Cumára, god of war; two or three love tales in verfe; and an excellent little work on Sanfcrit Metre, precifely in the manner of Terentianus; but he is believed by fome to have revifed the works of Válmic and Vyáfa, and to have corrected the perfect editions of them which are now current : this at leaft is admitted by all, that he ftands next in reputation to thofe venerable bards; and we muft regret, that he has left only two dramatick poems, efpecially as the fories in his Raghuvanfa would have fupplied him with a number of excellent fubjects.- Some of his contemporaries, and other Hindû poets even to our own times, have compofed fo many tragedies, comedies, farces, and mufical pieces, that the Indian theatre would fill as many volumes as that of any nation in ancient or modern Europe: all the Pandits affert that their plays are innumerable; and, on my firt inquiries concerning them, I had notice of more than thirty, which they confider as the flower.

B B
of their Natacs, among which the Malignant Child, the Rape of Ufhá, the Taming of Durváfas, the Seizure of the Lock, Málati and Mádhava, with five or fix dramas on the adventures of their incarnate gods, are the moft admired after thofe of Calidás. They are all in verie, where the dialogue is elevated; and in profe, where it is familiar: the men of rank and learning are reprefented fpeaking pure Sanfcrit, and the women Prácrit, which is little more than the language of the Bráhmens melted down by a delicate articulation to the foftnefs of Italian; while the low perfons of the drama fpeak the vulgar dialects of the feveral provinces which they are fuppofed to inhabit.

The play of Sacontalá muft have been very popular when it was firft reprefented; for the Indian empire was then in full vigour, and the national vanity muft have been highly flattered by the magnificent introduction of thofe kings and heroes in whom the Hindûs gloried; the fcenery muft have been fplendid and beautiful; and there is good reafon to believe, that the court at Avanti was equal in brilliancy during the reign of Vicramáditya, to that of any monarch in any age or country.-Dufhmanta, the hero of the piece, appears in the chronological tables of the Bráhmens among the Children of the Moon, and in the twenty-firft generation after the flood; fo that, if we can at all rely on the chronology of the Hindûs, he was nearly contemporary with Obed, or Jeffe; and Puru, his moft celebrated anceftor, was the fifth in defcent from Budha, or Mercury, who married, they fay, a daughter of the pious king, whom Vifhnu preferved in an ark from the univerfal deluge : his eldeft fon Bheret was the illuftrious progenitor of Curu, from whom Pándu was lineally defcended, and in whofe family the Indian Apollo became incarnate; whence the poem, next in fame to the Ramáyan, is called Mahábhárat.

As to the machinery of the drama, it is taken from the fyftem of mythology, which prevails to this day, and which it would require a large volume to explain ; but we cannot help remarking, that the deities introduced in the Fatal Ring are clearly allegorical perfonages. Maríchi, the firft production of Brahmá, or the Creative Power, fignifies light, that fubtil fluid which was created before its refervoir, the fun, as water was created before the fea; Cafyapa, the offspring of Maríchi, feems to be a perfonification of infinite fpace, comprehending innumerable worlds; and his children by Aditi, or his active power (unlefs Aditi mean the primeval day, and Diti, his other wife, the night), are Indra, or the vifible firmament, and the twelve Adityas, or funs, prefiding over as many months.

On the characters and conduct of the play I fhall offer no criticifin ; becaufe I am convinced that the taftes of men differ as much as their fentiments and paffions, and that, in feeling the beauties of art, as in fmelling flowers, tafting fruits, viewing profpects, and hearing melody, every individual muft be guided by his own fenfations and the incommunicable affociations of his own ideas. This only I may add, that if Sacontala fhould ever be acted in India, where alone it could be acted with perfect knowledge of Indian dreffes, manners, and fcenery, the piece might eafily be reduced to five acts of a moderate length, by throwing the third act into the fecond, and the fixth into the fifth; for it muft be confeffed that the whole of Dufhmanta's converfation with his buffoon, and great part of his courtfhip in the hermitage, might be omitted without any injury to the drama.

It is my anxious wifh that others may take the pains to learn Sanfcrit, and may be perfuaded to tranflate the works of Cálidás: I fhall hardly again employ my leifure in a tafk fo foreign to my profeffional (which are, in truth, my favourite) ftudies ; and have no intention of tranflating any other book from any language, except the Law Tract of Menu, and the new Digeft of Indian and Arabian laws; but, to fhow, that the Bráhmens, at leaft, do not think polite literature incompatible with jurifprudence, I cannot avoid mentioning, that the venerable compiler of the Hindu Digeft, who is now in his eighty-fixth year, has the whole play of Sacontalá by heart ; as he proved when I laft converfed with him, to my entire conviction. Left, however, I fhould hereafter feem to have changed a refolution which I mean to keep inviolate, I think it proper to fay, that I have already tranflated four or five other books, and among them the Hitópadéfa, which I undertook, merely as an exercife in learning Sanfcrit, three years before I knew that Mr. Wilkins, without whofe aid I fhould never have learnt it, had any thought of giving the fame work to the publick.

AEtr. I attend, Sir. - What are your commands?

Mon. This, Madam, is the numerous and polite affembly of the famed Hero, our king Vicramáditya, the patron of every delightful art ; and before this audience we muft do juftice to a new production of Culidás, a dramatick piece, entitled Sacontalá, or, The Fatal Ring : it is requefted, therefore, that all will be attentive.

AEtr. Who, Sir, could be inattentive to an entertainment fo well intended?

Man. [Smiling] I will fpeak, Madam, without referve.-As far as an enlightened audience reccive pleafure from our theatrical talents, and exprefs it, fo far, and no farther, I fet a value on them ; but my own mind is diffident of its powers, how ftrongly foever exerted.
Actr. You judge rightly in meafuring your own merit by the degree of pleafure which this affembly may receive; but its value, I truft, will prefently appear.-Have you any farther commands ?

Man. What better can you do, fince you are now on the fage, than exhilarate the fouls, and gratify the fenfe, of our auditory with a fong?

Actr. Shall I fing the defcription of a feafon? and which of the feafons do you chufe to hear defcribed?

Man. No finer feafon could be felected than the fummer, which is actually begun, and abounds with delights. How fweet is the clofe of a fummer day, which invites our youth to bathe in pure ftreams, and induces gentle flumber under the fhades refrefhed by fylvan breezes, which have paffed over the blooming Patalis and ftolen their fragrance!

AEtr. [Singing.] "Mark how the foft blof" foms of the Nágacéfar are lightly kiffed by the " bees! Mark how the damfels delicately place "behind their ears the flowers of Siríha !"

Man. A charming ftrain! the whole company fparkles, as it were, with admiration; and the mufical mode to which the words are adapted, has filled their fouls with rapture. By what other performance can we enfure a continuance of their favour?

Actr. Oh! by none better than by the Fatal Ring, which you have juft announced.

Man. How could I forget it! In that moment I was lulled to diftraction by the melody of thy voice, which allured my heart, as the king Dufhmanta is now allured by the fwift antelope.
[They both go out.

SACONTALA ;

TIIE FATAL RING.

ACT I.

Scene-A Forest.
Dufhmanta, in a car, purfuing an antelope, with a bow and quiver, attended by his Charioteer.

Char. [Looking at the antelope, and then at the king.]
W HEN I caft my eye on that black antelope, and on thee, O king, with thy braced bow, I fee before me, as it were, the God Mahéfa chafing a hart, with his bow, named pináca, braced in his left hand.

Dufbm. The fleet animal has given us a long chafe. Oh! there he runs, with his neck bent gracefully, looking back, from time to time, at the car which follows him. Now, through fear of a defcending fhaft, he contracts his forehand, and extends his flexible haunches; and now, through fatigue, he paufes to nibble the grafs in his path with his mouth half opened. See how he fprings and bounds with long fteps, lightly fkimming the ground, and rifing high in the air! And now fo rapid is his flight, that he is fcarce difcernible !

Char. The ground was uneven, and the horfes were checked in their courfe. He has taken advantage of our delay. It is level now, and we may eafily overtake him.

Dufbom. Loofen the reins.
Char. As the king commands.-[He drives the car firft at full .ppeed, and then gently.] - He could not efcape. The horfes were not even touched by the clouds of duft which they raifed; they toffed their manes, erected their ears, and rather glided than galloped over the fmooth plain.

Dufom. They foon outran the fwift antelope. -Objects which, from their diftance, appeared minute, prefently became larger: what was really divided, feemed united, as we paffed; and what was in truth bent, feemed ftraight. So fwift was the motion of the wheels, that nothing, for many moments, was either diftant or near. $\quad[H e$ fixes an arrow in bis bowphing.
[Bebind the fcenes.] He muft not be flain. This antelope, O king, has an afylum in our foreft : he muft not be flain.

Cbar. [Liftening and Looking.] Juft as the animal prefents a fair mark for your arrow, two hermits are advancing to interrupt your aim.
$D u f b m$. Then fop the car.
Cbar. The king is obeyed.
[He draws in the reins.
Enter a Hermit and his Pupil.
Herm. [Raijing his bands.] Slay not, O mighty fovereign, flay not a poor fawn, who has found a place of refuge. No, furely, no; he muft not be hurt. An arrow in the delicate body of a deer would be like fire in a bale of cotton. Compared with thy keen fhafts, how weak muft be the tender hide of a young antelope! Replace quickly, oh! replace the arrow which thou haft aimed. The weapons of you kings and warriors are deftined for the relief of the oppreffed, not for the deftruction of the guiltlefs.

Duflom. [Saluting them.] It is replaced. [He places the arrow in bis quiver.
Herm. [With joy.] Worthy is that act of thee, moft illuftrious of monarchs ; worthy, indeed, of a prince defcended from Puru. Mayft thou have a fon adorned with virtues, a fovereign of the world!

Pup. [Elevating both his hands.] Oh! by all means, may thy fon be adorned with every virtue, a fovereign of the world!

Duflom. [Bowing to them.] My head bears with reverence the order of a Brahmen.

Herm. Great king, we came hither to collect wood for a folemn facrifice; and this foreft, on the banks of the Malini, affords an afylum to the wild animals protected by Sacontala, whom our holy preceptor Canna has received as a facred depofit. If you have no other avocation, enter yon grove, and let the rights of hofpitality be duly performed. Having feen with your own eyes the virtuous behaviour of thofe whofe only wealth is their piety, but whofe worldly cares are now at an end, you will then exclaim, "How many good fubjects are defended by this " arm, which the bowftring has made callous!"

Duflom. Is the mafter of your family at home?
Herm. Our preceptor is gone to Sómatírt'ha, in hopes of deprecating fome-calamity, with which deftiny threatens the irreproachable Sacontalá ; and he has charged her, in his abfence, to receive all guefts with due honour.

Dufom. Holy man, I will attend her; and fhe, having obferved my devotion, will report it favourably to the venerable fage.

Both. Be it fo; and we depart on our own bufinefs. [The Hermit and bis Pupil go out.

Dufbm. Drive on the car. By vifiting the abode of holinefs, we fhall purify our fouls.

Cbar. As the king (may his life be long!) commands. [He drives on.
Dufbm. [Looking on all Jides.] That we are near the dwelling-place of pious hermits, would clearly have appeared, even if it had not been told.

Cbar. By what marks?
Dufbm. Do you not obferve them? See under yon trees the hallowed grains which have been fcattered on the ground, while the tender female parrots were feeding their unfledged young in their pendent nefts. Mark in other places the fhining pieces of polifhed fone which have bruifed the oily fruit of the facred Ingudi. Look at the young fawns, which, having acquired confidence in man, and accuftomed themfelves to the found of his voice, frifk at pleafure, without varying their courfe. Even the furface of the river is reddened with lines of confecrated bark, which float down its ftream. Look again; the roots of yon trees are bathed in the waters of holy pools, which quiver as the breeze plays upon them ; and the glowing luftre of yon frefh leaves is obfcured, for a time, by fmoke that rifes from oblations of clarified butter. See too, where the young roes graze, without apprehenfion from our approach, on the lawn before yonder garden, where the tops of the facrificial grafs, cut for fome religious rite, are fprinkled around.

Cbar. I now obferve all thofe marks of fome holy habitation.

Dufbm. [Turning afid.] This awful fanctuary, my friend, muft not be violated. Here, therefore, ftop the car; that I may defcend.

Char. I hold in the reins. The king may defcend at his pleafure.

Dufbm. [Having defcended, and looking at his own drefs.] Groves devoted to religion muft be entered in humbler habiliments. Take thefe regal ornaments; - [the Charioteer receives them] -and, whilft I am obferving thofe who inhabit this retreat, let the horfes be watered and drefled.

Char. Be it as you direct! [He goes out.
Dufbm. [Walking round and looking.] Now then I enter the fanctuary. - [He enters the grove.] -Oh! this place muft be holy, my right arm throbs.- [Paufing and confidering.] - What new acquifition does this omen promife in a fequeftered grove? But the gates of predeftined events are in all places open.
[Behind the feenes.] Come hither, my beloved companions; Oh! come hither.

Dufbm. [Liflening.] Hah! I hear female voices to the right of yon arbour. I am refolved to know who are converfing.- [He walks round and looks.]-There are fome damfels, I fee, belonging to the hermit's family who carry waterpots of different fizes proportioned to their ftrength, and are going to water the delicate plants. Oh! how charmingly they look! If the beauty of maids who dwell in woodland retreats cannot eafily be found in the receffes of a palace, the garden flowers muft make room for the bloffoms of the foreft, which excel them in colour and fragrance. [He Jtands gazing at them.

Enter Sacontalá, Anufúyá, and Priyamvadá, Anu. O my Sacontalá, it is in thy fociety that the trees of our father Canna feem to me delightful ; it well becomes thee, who art foft as the frefh-blown Mallicà, to fill with water the canals which have been dug round thefe tender fhrubs.

Sac. It is not only in obedience to our father that I thus employ myfelf, though that were a , fufficient motive, but I really feel the affection of a fifter for thefe young plants.
[Watering them.
Pri. My beloved friend, the fhrubs which you have watered flower in the fummer, which is now begun: let us give water to thofe which have paffed their flowering time; for our virtue will be the greater when it is wholly difinterefted.

Sac. Excellent advice! [Watering other plants.

Dufbom. [Afide in tranfport.] How! is that Canna's daughter, Sacontalá?-[With furprife.] -The venerable fage muft have an unfeeling heart, fince he has allotted a mean employment to fo lovely a girl, and has dreffed her in a coarfe mantle of woven bark. He, who could wifh that fo beautiful a creature, who at firft fight ravifhes my foul, fhould endure the hardfhips of his auftere devotion, would attempt, I fuppofe, to cleave the hard wood Sami with a leaf of the blue lotos. Let me retire behind this tree, that I may gaze on her charms without diminifhing her confidence.
[He retires.
Sac. My friend Priyamvadá has tied this manthe of bark fo clofely over my bofom that it gives me pain: Anufúyá, I requeft you to untie it.
[Anufu'yá unties the mantle.
Pri. [Laughing.] Well, my fweet friend, enjoy, while you may, that youthful prime, which gives your bofom fo beautiful a fwell.

Duflom. [Afide.] Admirably fooken, Priyamvadá! No; her charms cannot be hidden, even though a robe of intertwifted fibres be thrown over her fhoulders, and conceal a part of her bofom, like a veil of yellow leaves enfolding a radiant flower. The water lily, though dark mofs may fettle on its head, is neverthelefs beautiful; and the moon with dewy beams is rendered yet brighter by its black fpots. The bark itfelf acquires elegance from the features of a girl with antelope's eyes, and rather augments than diminifhes my ardour. Many are the rough falks which fupport the water lily; but many and exquifite are the bloffoms which hang on them.

Sac. [Looking before ber.] Yon Amra tree, my friends, points with the finger of its leaves, which the gale gently agitates, and feems inclined to whifper fome fecret. I will go near it. [They all approach the tree.
Pri. O my Sacontalá, let us remain fome time in this fhade.

Sac. Why here particularly?
Pri. Becaufe the Amra tree feems wedded to you, who are graceful as the blooming creeper which twines round it.

Sac. Properly are you named Priyamvadá, or fpeaking kindly.

Dufbom. [Afide.] She fpeaks truly. Yes; her lip glows like the tender leaflet ; her arms refemble two flexible ftalks; and youthful beauty fhines, like a bloffom, in all her lineaments.

Anu. See, my Sacontalá, how yon frefh Mallicà, which you have furnamed Vanàdófinì, or Delight of the Grove, has chofen the fweet Amra for her bridegroom.

Sac. [Approaching, and looking at it with pleafure.] How charming is the feafon, when the nuptials even of plants are thus publickly celebrated!
[She ftands admiring it.
Pri. [Smiling.] Do you know, my Anufúyá, why Sacontala gazes on the plants with fuch rapture?

Anu. No, indeed: I was trying to guefs. Pray, tell me.

Pri. "As the Grove's Delight is united to a " fuitable tree, thus I too hope for a bridegroom "to my mind."- That is her private thought at this moment.

Sac. Such are the flights of your own imagination. [Inverting the water-pot.

Anu. Here is a plant, Sacontalá, which you have forgotten, though it has grown up, like yourfelf, under the foftering care of our father Canna.

Sac. Then I fhall forget myfelf.-O wonder-ful!-[approaching the plant.]-O Priyamvadá! [looking at it with joy] I have delightful tidings for you.

Pri. What tidings, my beloved, for me?
Sac. This Mádhavi-creeper, though it be not the ufual time for flowering, is covered with gay bloffoms from its root to its top.

Both. [Approacbing it baftily.] Is it really $\{0$, fweet friend ?

Sac. Is it fo? look yourfelves.
Pri. [With eagerne/s.] From this omen, Sacontalá, I announce you an excellent hurband, who will very foon take you by the hand.
[Both girls look at Sacontalá.
Sac. [Dipleafed.] A ftrange fancy of yours!
Pri. Indeed, my beloved, I fpeak not jeftingly. I heard fomething from our father Canna. Your nurture of thefe plants has profpered ; and thence it is, that I foretel your approaching nuptials.

Anu. It is thence, my Priyamvadá, that fhe has watered them with fo much alacrity.

Sac. The Mádhavi plant is my fifter ; can I do otherwife than cherifh her?
[Pouring water on it.
Duflom. [Afide.] I fear the is of the fame religious order with her fofter-father. Or has a miftaken apprehenfion rifen in my mind? My warm heart is fo attached to her, that fhe cannot but be a fit match for a man of the military clafs. The doubts which awhile perplex the 'good, are foon removed by the prevalence of their ftrong inclinations. I am enamoured of her, and fhe cannot, therefore, be the daughter of a Bráhmen, whom I could not marry.

Sac. [Moving ber lead.] Alas! a bee has left the bloffom of this Mallicá, and is fluttering round my face. [She exprefles uneafinefs.

Dufbm. [Afide, witb affection.] How often have I feen our court damfels affectedly turn their heads afide from fome roving infect, merely to difplay their graces! but this rural charmer knits her brows, and gracefully moves her eyes through fear only, without art or affectation. Oh! happy bee, who toucheft the corner of that eye beautifully trembling; who, approaching the tip of that ear, murmureft as foftly as if thou wert whifpering a fecret of love; and who fippeft nectar, while fhe waves her graceful hand, from that lip, which contains all the treafures of delight! Whilit I am folicitous to know in what family the was born, thou art enjoying blifs, which to me would be fupreme felicity.

Sac. Difengage me, I entreat, from this importunate infect, which quite baffles my efforts.

Pri. What power have we to deliver you? The king Dufhmanta is the fole defender of our confecrated groves.

Dufom. [A/ide.] This is a good occafion for me to difcover myfelf--[advancing a little.]I muft not, I will not, fear. Yet— [checking bimSelf and retiring] -my royal character will thus abruptly be known to them. No ; I will appear as a fimple ftranger, and claim the duties of hofpitality.

Sac. This impudent bee will not reft. I will remove to another place.- [Stepping afide and looking round.]-Away! away! He follows me wherever I go. Deliver me, oh! deliver me from this diftrefs.

Dufbom. [Advancing baftily.] Ah! While the race of Puru govern the world, and reftrain even the moft profligate, by good laws well adminiftered, has any man the audacity to moleft the lovely daughters of pious hermits?
[They look at him with emotion.
Anu. Sir, no man is here audacious; but this damfel, our beloved friend, was teafed by a fluttering bee. [Both girls look at Sacontalá.

Duflom. [Approacbing ber.] Damfel, may thy devotion profper!
[Sacontala looks on the ground, bafbful and Jilent.
Anu. Our gueft muft be received with due honours.

Pri. Stranger, you are welcome. Go, my Sacontala; bring from the cottage a bafket of fruit and flowers. This river will, in the mean time, fupply water for his feet.
[Looking at the water-pots.
Dufbm. Holy maid, the gentlenefs of thy fpeech does me fufficient honour.

Anu. Sit down awhile on this bank of earth, fpread with the leaves of Septaperna: the fhade is refrefhing, and our lord muft want repofe after his journey.

Dufbm. You too muft all be fatigued by your hofpitable attentions; reft yourfelves, therefore, with me.

Pri. [Afide to Sacontalá.] Come, let us all be feated: our gueft is contented with our reception of him. [They all feat themfelves.

Sac. [Afide.] At the fight of this youth I feel an emotion farce confiftent with a grove devoted to piety.

Dufbm. [Gazing at them alternately.] How well your friendfhip agrees, holy damfels, with the charming equality of your ages, and of your beauties!

Pri. [Afide to Anufúyá.] Who can this be, my Anufúyá? The union of delicacy with robuftnefs in his form, and of fweetnefs with dignity in his difcourfe, indicate a character fit for ample dominion.

Anu. [Afide to Priyamvadá.] I too have been admiring him. I muft afk him a few queftions. - [Aloud.] Your fweet fpeech, Sir, gives me confidence. What imperial family is embellifhed by our noble gueft? What is his native country? Surely it muft be afflicted by his abfence from it. What, I pray, could induce your to humiliate that exalted form of yours by vifiting a foreft peopled only by fimple anchorites?

Sac. [Afide.] Perplex not thyfelf, O my heart! let the faithful Anufúyá direct with her counfel the thoughts which rife in thee.

Dufbom. [Afide.] How fhall I reveal, or how fhall I difguife myfelf?-[Mufing.]-Be it fo.[Aloud to Anufúyá.] Excellent lady, I am a ftudent of the Véda, dwelling in the city of our king, defcended from Puru; and, being occupied in the difcharge of religious and moral duties, am come hither to behold the fanctuary of virtue.

Anu. Holy men, employed like you, are our lords and mafters.
[Sacontalá looks modeft, yet with affection; wobile ber companions gaze alternately at her and at the king.
Anu. [Afide to Sacontalá.] Oh! if our venerable father were prefent-Sac. What if he were?

Anu. He would entertain our gueft with a variety of refrefhments.

Sac. [Pretending dippleafure.] Go too; you had fome other idea in your head; I will not liften to you. [She fits apart.
Dufbm. [Afide to Anufúyá and Priyamvadá.] In my turn, holy damfels, allow me to afk one queftion concerning your lovely friend.

Both. The requeft, Sir, does us honour.
$D u / b m$. The fage Canna, I know, is ever intent upon the great Being; and muft have declined all earthly connections. How then can this damfel be, as it is faid, his daughter?

Anu. Let our lord hear. There is, in the family of Cufa, a pious prince of extenfive power, eminent in devotion and in arms.
$D u / b m$. You fpeak, no doubt, of Caufica, the fage and monarch.
Anu. Know, Sir, that he is in truth her father; while Canna bears that reverend name, becaufe he brought her up, fince fhe was left an infant.

Dufbm. Left? the word excites my curiofity; and raifes in me a defire of knowing her whole ftory.

Anu. You fhall hear it, Sir, in few words.When that fage king had begun to gather the fruits of his auftere devotion, the gods of Swerga became apprehenfive of his increafing power, and fent the nymph Ménacà to fruftrate, by her allurements, the full effect of his piety.

Dufbo. Is a mortal's piety fo tremendous to the inferior deities? What was the event?

Anu. In the bloom of the vernal feafon, Caufica, beholding the beauty of the celeftial nymph, and wafted by the gale of defire- - [She Jops and looks modeft.
Dufbm. I now fee the whole. Sacontala then is the daughter of a king, by a nymph of the lower heaven.

Anu. Even fo.
Dufom. [A/ide.] The defire of my heart is gratified.-[Aloud.] How, indeed, could her tranfcendent beauty be the portion of mortal birth? Yon light, that farkles with tremulous beams, proceeds not from a terreftrial cavern.
> [Sacontala fits modeftly, with her eyes on the ground.

Duffom. [Again afide.] Happy man that I am! Now has my fancy an ample range. Yet, having heard the pleafantry of her companions on the fubject of her nuptials, I am divided with anxious doubt, whether fhe be not wholly deftined for a religious life.

Pri. [Smiling, and looking firft at Sacontalá, then at the king.] Our lord feems defirous of afking other queftions.
[Sacontalá rebukes Priyamvadá with ber band.
Dufbm. You know my very heart. I am, indeed, eager to learn the whole of this charmer's life; and muft put one queftion more.

Pri. Why fhould you mufe on it fo long?[A/ide.] One would think this religious man was forbidden by his vows to court a pretty woman.
$D u / b m$. This I afk. Is the ftrict rule of a hermit fo far to be obferved by Canna, that he cannot difpofe of his daughter in marriage, but muft check the natural impulfe of juvenile love? Can the (oh prepofterous fate!) be deftined to refide for life among her favourite antelopes, the black luftre of whofe eyes is far furpaffed by hers?

Pri. Hitherto, Sir, our friend has lived happy in this confecrated foreft, the abode of her fpiritual father; but it is now his intention to unite her with a bridegroom equal to herfelf.

Dufbm. [Afide, with ecftacy.] Exult, oh my heart, exult. All doubt is removed; and what before thou wouldft have dreaded as a flame, may now be approached as a gem ineftimable.

Sac. [Seeming angry.] Anufúyá, I will ftay here no longer.

Anu. Why fo, I pray?
Sac. I will go to the holy matron Gautamí, and let her know how impertinently our Paiyamvadá has been prattling. [She rijes.

Anu. It will not be decent, my love, for an inhabitant of this hallowed wood to retire before a gueft has received complete honour.
[Sacontalá, giving no anfwer, offers to go.
Dufbom. [Afide.] Is fhe then departing?[He rijes, as if going to ftop ber, but checks him. felf.] - The actions of a paffionate lover are as precipitate as his mind is agitated. Thus I, whofe paffion impelled me to follow the hermit's daughter, am reftrained by a fenfe of duty.

Pri. [Going up to Sacontalá.] My angry friend, you muft not retire.

Sac. [Stepping back and frowning.] What fhould detain me?

Pri. You owe me the labour, according to our agreement, of watering two more fhrubs. Pay me firft, to acquit your confcience, and then depart, if you pleafe. [Holding her.
$D u / \mathrm{lm}$. The damfel is fatigued, I imagine, by pouring fo much water on the cherifhed plants. Her arms, graced with palms like frefh bloffoms, hang carelefsly down; her bofom heaves with ftrong breathing; and now her difhevelled locks, from which the ftring has dropped, are held by one of her lovely hands. Suffer me, therefore, thus to difcharge the debt. - [Giving bis ring to Priyamvadá. Both damfels, reading the name Dufhmanta, infcribed on the ring, look with furprife at each other.] -It is a toy unworthy of your fixed attention; but I value it as a gift from the king.

Pri. Then you ought not, Sir, to part with it. Her debt is from this moment difcharged on your word only. [Sbe returns the ring. Anu. You are now releafed, Sacontalá, by this benevolent lord-or favoured, perhaps, by a monarch himfelf. To what place will you now retire ?

Sac. [Afide.] Muft I not wonder at all this if I preferve my fenfes ?

Pri. Are not you going, Sacontalá?
Sac. Am I your fubject? I fhall go when it pleafes me.

Duflom. [Afide, looking at Sacontalá.] Either fhe is affected towards me, as I am towards her, or I am diftracted with joy. She mingles not her difcourfe with mine; yet, when I fpeak, fhe liftens attentively. She commands not her actions in my prefence; and her eyes are engaged on me alone.

Behind tbe fcenes.] Oh pious hermits, preferve the animals of this hallowed foreft! The king Dufhmanta is hunting in it. The duft raifed by the hoofs of his horfes, which pound the pebbles ruddy as early dawn, falls like a fwarm of blighting infects on the confecrated boughs which fuftain your mantles of woven bark, moift with the water of the ftream in which you have bathed.

Dufbm. [Afide.] Alas! my officers, who are fearching for me, have indifcreetly difturbed this holy retreat.

Again behind tbe fcenes.] Beware, ye hermits, of yon elephant, who comes overturning all that oppofe him; now he fixes his trunk with violence on a lofty branch that obftructs his way; and now he is entangled in the twining ftalks of the Vratati. How are our facred rites interrupted! How are the protected herds difperfed! The wild elephant, alarmed at the new appearance of a car, lays our foreft wafte.

Dufbm. [Afiae.] How unwillingly am I offending the devout forefters ! Yes; I muft go to them inftantly.

Pri. Noble ftranger, we are confounded with dread of the enraged elephant. With your permiffion, therefore, we retire to the hermit's cottage.

Anu. O Sacontalá, the venerable matron will be much diftreffed on your account. Come quickly, that we may be all fafe together.

Sac. [Walking Nowly.] I am ftopped, alas! by a fudden pain in my fide.

Duf万m. Be not alarmed, amiable damfels. It fhall be my care that no difturbance happen in your facred groves.

Pri. Excellent ftranger, we were wholly unacquainted with your ftation; and you will forgive us, we hope, for the offence of intermitting awhile the honours due to you: but we humbly requeft that you will give us once more the pleafure of feeing you, though you have not now been received with perfect hofpitality.

Duflom. You depreciate your own merits. The fight of you, fweet damfels, has fufficiently honoured me.

Sac. My foot, O Anufúyá, is hurt by this pointed blade of Cufa grafs; and now my loofe veft of bark is caught by a branch of the Curuvaca. Help me to difentangle myfelf, and fupport me. [She goes out, looking from time to time at Dufhmanta, and fupported by the damfels.]

Dufbo. [Sigbing.] They are all departed; and I too, alas! mult depart. For how fhort a moment have I been bleffed with a fight of the incomparable Sacontalá! I will fend my attendants to the city, and take my fation at no great diftance from this foreft. I cannot, in truth, divert my mind from the fweet occupation of gazing on her. How, indeed, fhould I otherwife occupy it? My body moves onward; but my reftlefs heart runs back to her; like a light flag borne on a ftaff againft the wind, and fluttering in an oppofite direction. [ He goes out.

ACT II.

SCENE- $A$ PLAIN, with royal pavilions on the firt of the foreft.

Mádbavya. [Sighing and lamenting.]
STRANGE recreation this!-Ah me! I am wearied to death.-My royal friend has an unaccountable tafte.-What can I think of a king fo paffionately fond of chafing unprofitable qua-drupeds?-" Here runs an antelope! there goes " a boar!"-Such is our only converfation.Even at noon, in exceffive heat, when not a tree in the foreft has a fhadow under it, we muft be fkipping and prancing about, like the beafts whom we follow.-Are we thirlty? We have nothing to drink but the waters of mountain torrents, which tafte of burned ftones and mawkifh leaves.-Are we hungry? We muft greedily devour lean venifon, and that commonly roafted to a ftick.-Have I a moment's repofe at night ? - My flumber is difturbed by the din of horfes and elephants, or by the fons of flave-girls hollooing out, " More venifon, more venifon !"Then comes a cry that pierces my ear, "Away " to the foreft, away!"-Nor are thefe my only grievances: frefh pain is now added to the fmart of $m y$ firft wounds; for, while we were feparated from our king, who was chafing a foolifh deer, he entered, I find, yon lonely place, and there, to my infinite grief, faw a certain girl, called Sacontalá, the daughter of a hermit: from that moment not a word of returning to the city!Thefe diftreffing thoughts have kept my eyes open the whole night.-Alas! when fhall we return ?-I cannot fet eyes on my beloved friend Dufhmanta fince he fet his heart on taking another wife.-[Stepping afide and looking]-Oh! there he is.-How changed !-He carries a bow, indeed, but wears for his diadem a garland of wood-flowers.-He is advancing: I muft begin my operations.- [He ftands leaning on a ftaf.] -Let me thus take a moment's reft.-[Aloud.]

Dufhmanta enters, as defcribed.

Dufbm. [Afide, fighing.] My darling is not fo eafily attainable ; yet my heart affumes confidence from the manner in which fhe feemed affected: furely, though our love has not hitherto profpered, yet the inclinations of us both are fixed on our union.- [Smiling.]-Thus do lovers agreeably beguile themfelves, when all the powers of their fouls are intent on the objects of their defire ! -But am I beguiled ? No ; when fhe caft her eyes even on her companions, they farkled with tendernefs; when fhe moved her graceful arms, they dropped, as if languid with love; when her friend remonftrated againft her departure, fhe fpoke angrily-All this was, no doubt, on my account.--Oh! how quick--fighted is love in difcerning his own advantages !

Mádb. [Bending downward, as before.] Great prince! my hands are unable to move; and it is with my lips only that I can mutter a bleffing on you. May the king be victorious !

Duflom. [Looking at bim and fmiling.] Ah! what has crippled thee, friend Mádhavya?

Mádh. You ftrike my eye with your own hand, and then afk what makes it weep.

Dufbm. Speak intelligibly. I know not what you mean.

Mádb. Look at yon Vétas tree bent double in the river. Is it crooked, I pray, by its own act, or by the force of the ftream ?

Du/bm. It is bent, I fuppofe, by the current. Mádh. So am I by your Majefty.
Dufbm. How fo, Mádhavya?
Mádh. Does it become you, I pray, to leave the great affairs of your empire, and fo charming a manfion as your palace, for the fake of living here like a forefter? Can you hold a council in a wood? I, who am a reverend Bráhmen, have no longer the ufe of my hands and feet: they are put out of joint by my running all day long after dogs and wild beafts. Favour me, I entreat, with your permiffion to repofe but a fingle day.

Dufbm. [Afide.] Such are this poor fellow's complaints ; whilf I, when I think of Canna's daughter, have as little relifh for hunting as he: How can I brace this bow, and fix a fhaft in the ftring, to fhoot at thofe beautiful deer who dwell in the fame groves with my beloved, and whofe eyes derive luftre from hers ?

Mádh. [Looking fledfaftly at the king.] What fcheme is your royal mind contriving? I have been crying, I find, in a wildernefs.

Dufbm. I think of nothing but the gratification of my old friend's wifhes.

Mádh. [Foyfully.] Then may the king live long! [Rijing, but counterfeiting feeblenefs.
$D u \int b m$. Stay; and liften to me attentively.
Mádh. Let the king command.
Duflom. When you have taken repofe, I fhall want your affiftance in another bufinefs, that will give you no fatigue.

Mádb. Oh! what can that be, unlefs it be eating rice-pudding?

Duflom. You fhall know in due time. Mádh. I fhall be delighted to hear it.
Duflom. Hola! who is there?

The Chamberlain enters.

Cham. Let my fovereign command me.

Dufbm. Raivataca, bid the General attend.
Cham. I obey.- [He goes out, and returns with the General.] --Come quickly, Sir, the king ftands expecting you.

Gen. [Afide, looking at Dufhmanta.] How comes it that hunting, which moralifts reckon a vice, fhould be a virtue in the eyes of a king? Thence it is, no doubt, that our emperor, occupied in perpetual toil, and inured to conftant heat, is become fo lean, that the funbeams hardly affect him ; while he is fo tall, that he looks to us little men, like an elephant grazing on a mountain : he feems all foul.- [Aloud, approaching the king.]-May our monarch ever be victorious !-This foreft, O king, is infefted by beafts of prey: we fee the traces of their huge feet in every path.-What orders is it your pleafure to give?

Dufbm. Bhadraféna, this moralizing Mádhavya has put a ftop to our recreation by forbidding the pleafures of the chafe.

Gen. [Afide to Mádhavya.] Be firm to your word, my friend ; whilft I found the king's real inclinations.-[Aloud.] O! Sir, the fool talks idly. Confider the delights of hunting. The body, it is true, becomes emaciated, but it is light and fit for exercife. Mark how the wild beafts of various kinds are varioufly affected by fear and by rage! What pleafure equals that of a proud archer, when his arrow hits the mark as it flies?-Can hunting be juftly called a vice? No recreation, furely, can be compared with it.

Mádb. [Angrily.] Away, thou falfe flatterer ! The king, indeed, follows his naturai bent, and is excufable; but thou, fon of a flave girl, haft no excufe. - Away to the wood !-How I wifh thou hadft been feized by a tiger or an old bear, who was prowling for a fkakall, like thyfelf!

Duflom. We are now, Bhadraféna, encamped near a facred hermitage ; and I cannot at prefent applaud your panegyrick on hunting. This day, therefore, let the wild buffalos roll undifturbed in the fhallow water, or tofs up the fand with their horns; let the herd of antelopes, affembled under the thick fhade, ruminate without fear ; let the large boars root up the herbage on the brink of yon pool; and let this my bow take repofe with a flackened ftring.

Gen. As our lord commands.
$D u \int m$. Recall the archers who have advanced before me, and forbid the officers to go very far from this hallowed grove. Let them beware of irritating the pious: holy men are eminent for patient virtues, yet conceal within their bofoms a fcorching flame; as carbuncles are naturally cool to the touch; but, if the rays of the fun have been imbibed by them, they burn the hand, Máds. Away now, and triumph on the delights of hunting.

Gen. The king's orders are obeyed.
[He goes out.
Dufbm. [To his attendants.] Put off your hunting apparel ; and thou, Raivataca, continue in waiting at a little diftance.

Cham. I fhall obey.
[Goes out.
Mádh. So! you have cleared the ftage: not even a fly is left on it. Sit down, I pray, on this parement of fmooth pebbles, and the fhade of this tree fhall be your canopy: I will fit by you; for I am impatient to know what will give me no fatigue.

Duflom. Go firft, and feat thyfelf.
Mádh. Come, my royal friend.
[They both fit under a tree.
Dufbm. Friend Mádhavya, your eyes have not been gratified with an object which beft deferves to be feen.

Mádb. Yes, truly; for a king is before them.
Dufbm. All men are apt, indeed, to think favourably of themfelves; but 1 meant Sacontalá, the brighteft ornament of thefe woods.

Mádb. [Afide.] I muft not foment this paffion. - [Aloud.] What can you gain by feeing her ? She is a Bráhmen's daughter, and confequently no match for you!

Dufbom, What! Do people gaze at the new moon, with uplifted heads and fixed eyes, from a hope of poffeffing it? But you muft know, that the heart of Dufhmanta is not fixed on an object which he muft for ever defpair of attaining.

Mádb. Tell me how.
$D u \int \mathrm{~lm}$. She is the daughter of a pious prince and warriour, by a celeftial nymph; and, her mother having left her on earth, fhe has been foftered by Canna, even as a frefh bloffom of Malati, which droops on its pendant falk, is raifed and expanded by the fun's light.

Mádh. [Laugbing.] Your defire to poffefs this ruftick girl, when you have women bright as gems in your palace already, is like the fancy of a man, who has loft his relifh for dates, and longs for the four tamarind.

Dufbon. Did you know her, you would not talk fo wildly.

Mádb. Oh! certainly, whatever a king admires muft be fuperlatively charming.

Dufom. [Smiling.] What need is there of long defcription? When I meditate on the power of Brahmà, and on her lineaments, the creation of fo tranfcendent a jewel outfhines, in my appre• henfion, all his other works: fhe was formed and moulded in the eternal mind, which had raifed with its utmof exertion, the ideas of perfect fhapes, and thence made an affemblage of all abftract beauties.

Madb. She muft render, then, all other handfome women contemptible.

Dufbm. In my mind fhe really does. I know not yet what bleffed inhabitant of this world will be the poffeffor of that faultlefs beauty, which now refembles a bloffom whofe fragrance has not been diffufed; a frefh leaf, which no hand has torn from its ftalk; a pure diamond, which no polifher has handled; new honey, whofe fweetnefs is yet untafted; or rather the celeftial fruit of collected virtues, to the perfection of which nothing can be added.

Madds. Make hafte, then, or the fruit of all virtues will drop into the hand of fome devout ruftick, whofe hair fhines with oil of Ingudi.

Dufbm. She is not her own miftrefs; and her fofter-father is at a diftance.

Mádh. How is the difpofed towards you ?
Du/bm. My friend, the damfels in a hermit's family are naturally referved: yet the did look at me, wifhing to be unperceived; then fhe fmiled, and ftarted a new fubject of converfation. Love is by nature averfe to a fudden communication, and hitherto neither fully difplays, nor wholly conceals, himfelf in her demeanour towards me.

Mádh. [Laughing.] Has the thus taken poffeffion of your heart on fo tranfient a view ?

Dufbom. When fhe walked about with her female friends, I faw her yet more diftinctly, and my paffion was greatly augmented. She faid fweetly, but untruly, "My foot is hurt by " the points of the Cufa grafs :" then the ftopped ; but foon, advancing a few paces, turned back her face, pretending a wifh to difentangle her veft of woven bark from the branches in which it had not really been caught.

Mádh. You began with chafing an antelope, and have now farted new game: thence it is, I prefume, that you are grown fo fond of a confecrated foref.

Dufbm. Now the bufinefs for you, which I mentioned, is this: you, who are a Bráhmen, muft find fome expedient for my fecond entrance into that afylum of virtue.

Mádh. And the advice which I give is this: remember that you are a king.

Duflom. What then?
Mádh. "Hola! bid the hermits bring my " fixth part of their grain." Say this, and enter the grove without fcruple.

Dufom. No, Mádhavya: they pay a different tribute, who, having abandoned all the gems and gold of this world, poffefs riches far fuperior. The wealth of princes, collected from the four orders of their fubjects, is perifhable ; but pious men give us a fixth part of the fruits of their piety; fruits which will never perifh.

Bebind the fcenes.] Happy men that we are ! we have now attained the object of our defire.

Duflom. Hah! I hear the voices of fome religious anchorites.

The Chamberlain enters.

Cbam. May the king be victorious!-Two young men, fons of a hermit, are waiting at my ftation, and foliciting an audience.

Du/bm. Introduce them without delay.
Cham. As the king commands.- [He goes out, and re-enters with two Bráhmens. ]-Come on; come this way.

Firft Brábm. [Looking at the king.] Oh! what confidence is infpired by his brilliant appearance ! -Or proceeds it rather from his difpofition to virtue and holinefs? - Whence comes it, that my fear vanifhes?-He now has taken his abode in a wood which fupplies us with every enjoyment; and with all his exertions for our fafety, his devotion increafes from day to day. -The praife of a monarch who has conquered his paffions afcends even to heaven: infpired bards are continually finging, "Behold a virtuous prince!" but with us the royal name ftands fift: "Behold, among kings, a fage!"

Second Brábm. Is this, my friend, the truly virtuous Dufhmanta?

Firft Bráhm. Even he.

Second Brabm. It is not then wonderful, that he alone, whofe arm is lofty and Atrong as the main bar of his city gate, poffeffes the whole earth, which forms a dark boundary to the ocean ; or that the gods of Swerga, who fiercely contend in battle with evil powers, proclaim victory gained by his braced bow, not by the thunderbolt of INDRA.

Both. [Approacbing him.] O king, be victorious!

Dufom. [Rijing.] I humbly falute you both. Both. Bleffings on thee!
Dufbom. [Respectfully.] May I know the caule of this vifit?

Firfl Brábm. Our fovereign is hailed by the pious inhabitants of thefe woods; and they im-plore- - Duflom. What is their command?

Firft Brábm. In the abfence of our fpiritual guide, Canna, fome evil demons are difturbing our holy retreat. Deign, therefore, accompanied by thy charioteer, to be mafter of our afylum, if it be only for a few fhort days.

Dufbm. [Eagerly.] I am highly favoured by your invitation.

Mádh. [A/ide.] Excellent promoters of your defign! They draw you by the neck, but not againft your will.

Duflom. Raivataca, bid my charioteer bring my car, with my bow and quiver.

Cbam. I obey.

[He goes out.
Firft Brábm. Such condefgenfion well becomes thee, who art an univerfal guardian.

Second Bráhm. Thus do the defcendants of Puru perform their engagement to deliver their fubjects from fear of danger.

Duffom. Go firf, holy men : I will follow inftantly.

Both. Be ever viCtorious! [They go out.
Dufbom. Shall you not be delighted, friend Mádhavya, to fee my Sacontalá ?

Madb. At firf I fhould have had no objection; but I have a confiderable one fince the ftory of the demons.

Duflom. Oh! fear nothing: you will be near me.
Mádh. And you, I hope, will have leifure to protect me from them.

The Chamberlain re-enters.

Cham. May our lord be victorious! The imperial car is ready; and all are expecting your triumphant approach. Carabba too, a meffenger from the queen-mother, is juft arrived from the city.

Dufbm. Is he really come from the venerable queen?

Cham. There can be no doubt of it.
DuJbm. Let him appear before me.
[The Chamberlain goes out, and returns with the Meffenger.

Cbam. There ftands the king-O Carabba, approach him with reverence.

Meff. [Proftrating himfelf.] May the king be ever victorious! —— The royal mother fends this meffage-Dufbm. Declare her command.

Meff: Four days hence the ufual faft for the advancement of her fon will be kept with folemnity; and the prefence of the king (may his life be prolonged!) will then be required.

Dufbm. On one hand is a commiffion from holy Bráhmens ; on the other, a command from my revered parent: both duties are facred, and neither muft be neglected.

Mádb. [Laughing.] Stay fufpended between them both, like king Trifancu between heaven and earth; when the pious men faid, "Rife !" and the gods of Swerga faid, "Fall!"

Dufom. In truth I am greatly perplexed. My mind is principally diftracted by the diftance of the two places where the two duties are to be performed; as the fream of a river is divided by rocks in the middle of its bed.- [Mufing.] Friend Mádhavya, my mother brought you up as her own fon, to be my playfellow, and to divert me in my childhood. You may very properly act my part in the queen's devotions. Return then to the city, and give an account of my diftrefs through the commiffion of thefe reverend forefters.

Mádb. That I will ;-but you could not really fuppofe that I was afraid of demons!
$D u / b m$. How come you, who are an egregious Bráhmen, to be fo bold on a fudden?

Mádh. Oh! I am now a young king.
Dufbm. Yes, certainly; and I will difpatch my whole train to attend your highnefs, whilf I put an end to the difturbance in this hermitage.

Mádh. [Strutting.] See, I am a prince regnant.

Du/bm. [A/ide.] This buffoon of a Bráhmen has a flippery genius. He will perhaps difclofe my prefent purfuit to the women in the palace. I muft try to deceive him.- [Taking Mádhavya by the hand.] - I fhall enter the foreft, be affured, only through refpect for its pious inhabitants; not from any inclination for the daughter of a hermit. How far am I raifed above a girl educated among antelopes ; a girl, whofe heart muft ever be a ftranger to love!- The tale was invented for my diverfion.

Mádh. Yes, to be fure; only for your diverfion.
$D u f b m$. Then farewel, my friend; execute my commiffion faithfully, whilft I proceedto defend the anchorites. [All go out.

ACT III.

SCENE-The Hermitage in a Grove.

Pupil. [Meditating with wonder.]

Hogreat is the power of Dufhmanta!-The monarch and his charioteer had no fooner entered the grove than we continued our holy rites without interruption. - What words can defcribe him ?-By his barely aiming a fhaft, by the mere found of his bow-ftring, by the fimple murmur of his vibrating bow, he difperfes at once our calamities.- Now then I deliver to the priefts this bundle of frefh Cufa grafs to be fcattered round the place of facrifice- $[$ Looking bsbind the fcenes.] - Ah! Priyamvadá, for whom are you carrying that ointment of Usira roo', and thofe leaves of water lilies ?- [Liftening attentively. ]-What fay you? - That Sacontali is extremely difordered by the fun's heat, and that you have procured for her a cooling medicine! Let her, my Priyamvadá, be diligently attended; for fhe is the darling of our venerable father Canna.-I will adminifter, by the hand of Gau-tamí, fome healing water confecrated in the ceremony called Vaitána.
[He goes out.
Dufhmanta enters, exprefing the diftraction of a lover.
Dufbm. I well know the power of her devotion: that fhe will fuffer none to difpofe of her but Canna, I too well know. Yet my heart can no more return to its former placid ftate, than water can reafcend the fteep, down which it has fallen.-O God of Love, how can thy darts be fo keen, fince they are pointed with flowers? Yes, I difcover the reafon of their keennefs. They are tipped with the flames which the wrath of Hara kindled, and which blaze at this moment, like the Bárava fire under the waves: how elfe couldft thou, who waft confumed even to afhes, be ftill the inflamer of our fouls? By thee and by the moon, though each of you feems worthy of confidence, we lovers are cruelly deceived. They who love as I do, afcribe flowery fhafts to thee, and cool beams to the moon, with equal impropriety; for the moon fheds fire on them with her dewy rays, and thou pointeft with fharp diamonds thofe arrows which feem. to be barbed with bloffoms. Yet this god, who bears a fifh on his banners, and who wounds me to the foul, will give me real delight, if he deftroy me with the aid of my beloved, whofe eyes are large and beautiful as thofe of a roe.O powerful divinity, even when I thus adore thy attributes, haft thou no compaffion? Thy fire, O Love, is fanned into a blaze by a hundred of my vain thoughts.-Does it become thee to draw thy bow even to thy ear, that the fhaft, aimed at my bofom, may infliat a deeper wound? Where now can I recreate my afflicted foul by the permifion of thofe pious men whofe uneafinefs I have removed by difmiffing my train? - [Sighing.]-I can have no relief but from a fight of my beloved.-[Looking up.] This intenfely hot noon muft, no doubt, be paffed by Sacontala with her damfels on the banks of this river over-fhadowed with Tamálas. - It muft be fo:-I will advance thither.-[Walking round and looking.]-My fweet friend has, I guefs, been lately walking under that row of young trees; for I fee the ftalks of fome flowers, whicis probably fhe gathered, fill unfhrivelled; and fome frefh leaves, newly plucked, ftill dropping milk.-[Feeling a breeze.]-Ah! this bank has a delightful air!-Here may the gale embrace me, wafting odours from the water lilies, and cool my breaft, inflamed by the bodilefs god, with the liquid particles which it catches from the waves of the Málinì.-[Looking down.]Happy lover! Sacontalá muft be fomewhere in this grove of flowering creepers; for I difcern on the yellow fand at the door of yon arbour fome recent footfeps, raifed a little before, and depreffed behind by the weight of her elegant limbs.-II hall have a better view from behind this thick foliage. - [He conceals bimfelf, looking vigilantly.]-Now are my eyes fully gratified. The darling of my heart, with her two faithful attendants, repofes on a fmooth rock frown with frefh flowers.-Thefe branches will hide me, whilft I hear their charming converfation.
[He ftands concealed, and gazes.
Sacontalá and ber two Damfels difcovered.
Both. [Fanning' her.] Say, beloved Sacontalá, does the breeze, raifed by our fans of broad lotos leaves, refrefh you?

Sac. [Mournfully.] Why, alas, do my dear friends take this trouble?
[Both look forrowfully at each other. Dufbm. [Afide.] Ah! fhe feems much indifpofed. What can have been the fatal caufe of fo violent a fever? - Is it what my heart fuggefts? Or- [Mufing]-I am perplexed with doubts.The medicine extracted from the balmy Usíra has been applied, I fee, to her bofom: her only bracelet is made of thin filaments from the falks of a water lily, and even that is loofely bound on her arm. Yet, even thus difordered, the is exquifitely beautiful.-Such are the hearts of the young! Love and the fun equally inflame us; but the fcorching heat of fummer leads not equally to happinefs with the ardour of youthful defires.

Pri. [Afide to Anufúyá.] Did you not obferve how the heart of Sacontalá was affected by the firft fight of our pious monarch? My fufpicion is, that her malady has no other caufe.

Anu. [Afide to Priyamvadá.] The fame fufpicion had rifen in my mind. I will afk her at once.- [Aloud.]-My fweet Sacontalá, let me put one queftion to you. What has really occafioned your indifpofition?

Duffom. [Afide.] She muft now declare it. Ah! though her bracelets of lotos are bright as moon beams, yet they are marked, I fee, with black fots from internal ardour.

Sac. [Half raifing berfelf.] Oh! fay what you fufpect to have occafioned it.

Anu. Sacontalá, we mult neceflarily be ignorant of what is paffing in your breaft ; but I fufpect your cafe to be that which we have often heard related in tales of love. Tell us openly what caufes your illnefs. A phyfician, without knowing the caufe of a diforder, cannot even begin to apply a remedy.

Dufom. [Afide.] I flatter myfelf with the fame fufpicion.

Sac. [Afide.] My pain is intolerable; yet I cannot haftily difclofe the occafion of it.

Pri. My fweet friend, Anufúyá, fpeaks rationally. Conf ler the violence of your indifpofition. Every day you will be more and more emaciated, though your exquifite beauty has not yet forfaken you.

Duflom. [Afide.] Moft true. Her forehead is parched ; her neck droops; her wailt is more flender than before; her fhoulders languidly fall; her complection is wan; fhe refembles a Mádhaví creeper, whofe leaves are dried by a fultry gale: yet, even thus transformed, fhe is lovely, and charms my foul.

Sac. [Sighing.] What more can I fay? Ah! why fhould I be the occafion of your forrow?

Pri. For that very reafon, my beloved, we are folicitous to know your fecret; fince, when each of us has a fhare of your uneafinefs, you will bear more eaflly your own portion of it.

Duflom. [Afide.] Thus urged by two friends, who fhare her pains as well as her pleafures, fhe cannot fail to difclofe the hidden caufe of her malady; whilft I, on whom fhe looked at our firf interview with marked affection, am filled with anxious defire to hear her anfwer.

Sac. From the very inflant when the accomplifhed prince, who has juft given repofe to our hallowed foreft, met my eye-> [Sbe breaks off, and looks modeft.

Both. Speak on, beloved Sacontalá. Sac. From that inftant my affection was unalterably fixed on him-and thence I am reduced to my prefent languor.

Anu. Fortunately your affection is placed on a man worthy of yourfelf.

Pri. Oh! could a fine river have deferted the fea and flowed into a lake ?

Dufom. [Joyfully.] That which I was eager to know, her own lips have told. Love was the caufe of my diftemper, and love has healed it; as a fummer's day, grown black with clouds, relieves all animals from the heat which itfelf had caufed.

Sac. If it be no difagreeable tafk, contrive, I entreat you, fome means by which I may find favour in the king's eyes.

DuJbm. [Afide.] That requeft banifhes all my cares, and gives me rapture even in my prefent uneafy fituation.

Pri. [Afide to Anufúyá.] A remedy for her, my friend, will fcarce be attainable. Exert all the powers of your mind; for her illnefs admits of no delay.

Anu. [Afide to Priyamvadá.] By what expedient can her cure be both accelerated and kept fecret?

Pri. [As before.] Oh! to keep it fecret will be eafy; but to attain it foon, almoft infuperably difficult.

Anu. [As before.] How fo?

Pri. The young king feemed, I admit, by his tender glances, to be enamoured of her at firft fight ; and he has been obferved, within thefe few days, to be pale and thin, as if his paffion had kept him long awake.

Duflom. [Afide.] So it has-This golden bracelet, fullied by the flame which preys on me, and which no dew mitigates, but the tears gufhing nightly from thefe eyes, has fallen again and again on my wrift, and has been replaced on my emaciated arm.

Pri. [Aloud.] I have a thought, AnufúyáLet us write a love letter, which I will conceal in a flower, and, under the pretext of making a refpectful offering, deliver it myfelf into the king's hand.

Anu. An excellent contrivance! It pleafes me highly;-but what fays our beloved Sacontalá?

Sac. I muft confider, my friend, the poffible confequences of fuch a ftep.

Pri. Think alfo of a verfe or two, which may fuit your paffion, and be confiftent with the character of a lovely girl born in an exalted family.

Sac. 1 will think of them in due time; but my heart flutters with the apprehenfion of being rejected.

Dufbm. [Afide.] Here fands the man fupremely bleffed in thy prefence, from whom, O timid girl, thou art apprehenfive of a refufal!

Here fands the man, from whom, O beautiful maid, thou fearef rejection, though he loves thee diftractedly. He who fhall poffers thee will feek no brighter gem ; and thou art the gem which I am eager to poffefs.

Anu. You depreciate, Sacontalá, your own incomparable merits. What man in his fenfes would intercept with an umbrella the moonlight of autumn, which alone can allay the fever caufed by the heat of the noon?

Sac. [Smiling.] I am engaged in thought.
[She meditates.
Dufbin. Thus then I fix my eyes on the lovely poetefs, without clofing them a moment, while fhe meafures the feet of her verfe: her forehead is gracefully moved in cadence, and her whole afpect indicates pure affection.

Sac. I have thought of a couplet; but we have no writing implements.

Pri. Let us hear the words; and then I will mark them with my nail on this lotos leaf, foft and green as the breaft of a young paroquet: it may eafily be cut into the form of a letter.Repeat the verfes.

Sac. " Thy heart, indeed, I know not: but " mine, oh ! cruel, love warms by day and by " night ; and all my faculties are centered on " thee."

Dufom. [Hafily advancing, and pronouncing. a verfe in the fame meafure.] "Thee, O flender " maid, love only warms; but me he burns; " as the day-ftar only ftifles the fragrance of the " night-flower, but quenches the very orb of " the moon."

Anu. [Looking at him joyfully.] Welcome, great king: the fruit of my friend's imagination has ripened without delay.
[Sacontalá expreffes an inclination to rife.
Dufbm. Give yourfelf no pain. Thofe delicate limbs, which repofe on a couch of flowers, thofe arms, whofe bracelets of lotos are difarranged by a flight preffure, and that fweet frame, which the hot noon feems to have difordered, muft not be fatigued by ceremony.

Sac. [A/ide.] O my heart, canft thou not reft at length after all thy fufferings?

Anu. Let our fovereign take for his feat a part of the rock on which the repofes.
[Sacontalá makes a little room.
Dufbm. [Seating himfelf.] Priyamvadá, is not the fever of your charming friend in fome degree abated ?

Pri. [Smiling.] She has juft taken a falutary medicine, and will foon be reftored to health. But, O mighty prince, as I am favoured by you and by her, my friendihip for Sacontalá prompts me to converfe with you for a few moments.

Dufbm. Excellent damfel, fpeak openly; and fupprefs nothing.

Pri. Our lord fhall hear.
$D u / b m$. I am attentive.
Pri. By difpelling the alarms of our pious hermits, you have difcharged the duty of a great monarch.

Duflom. Oh! talk a little on other fubjects.
Pri. Then I muft inform you that our beloved companion is enamoured of you, and has been reduced to her prefent languor by the refiftlefs divinity, love. You only can preferve her ineftimable life.

Dufbm. Sweet Priyamvadá, our paffion is reciprocal ; but it is I who am honoured.

Sac. [Smiling, with a mixture of affection and refentment.] Why fhould you detain the virtuous monarch, who muft be afflicted by fo long an abfence from the fecret apartments of his palace?
$D u / / \mathrm{m}$. This heart of mine, oh thou who art of all things the deareft to it, will have no object but thee, whofe eyes enchant me with their black fplendour, if thou wilt but fpeak in a milder ftrain. I, who was nearly flain by love's arrow, am deftroyed by thy fpeech.

Anu. [Laughing.] Princes are faid to have many favourite conforts. You muft affure us, therefore, that our beloved friend fhall not be expofed to affliction through our conduct.

Dufom. What need is there of many words? Let there be ever fo many women in my palace, I will have only two objects of perfect regard ; the fea-girt earth, which I govern, and your fweet friend, whom I love.

Both. Our anxiety is diffipated.
[Sacontala ftrives in vain to conceal ber joy.
Pri. [A/ide to Anufúyá.] See how our friend recovers her fpirits by little and little, as the peahen, oppreffed by the fummer heat, is refrefhed by a foft gale and a gentle fhower.

Sac. [To the damfels.] Forgive, I pray, my offence in having ufed unmeaning words : they were uttered only for your amufement in return for your tender care of me.

Pri. They were the occafion, indeed, of our ferious advice. But it is the king who mult forgive: who elfe is offended?

Sac. The great monarch will, I truft, excufe what has been faid either before him or in his abfence. - [Afide to the damfels.] Intercede with him, I entreat you.

Dufbom. [Smiling.] I would cheerfully forgive any offence, lovely Sacontalá, if you, who have dominion over my heart, would allow me full room to fit by you, and recover from my fatigue, on this flowery cauch preffed by your delicate limbs.

Pri. Allow him room; it will appeafe him, and make him happy.

Sac. [Pretending anger, afide to Priyamvadá.]

Be quiet, thou mifchief-making girl! Dof thou fport with me in my prefent weak fate?

Anu. [Looking bebind the fcenes.] O! my Priyamvadá, there is our favourite young antelope running wildly and turning his eyes on all fides: he is, no doubt, feeking his mother, who has rambled in the wide foreft. I muft go and affift his fearch.

Pri. He is very nimble; and you alone will never be able to confine him in one place. I muft accompany you.
[Both going out.
Sac. Alas! I cannot confent to your going far: I thall be left alone.

Both. [Smiling.] Alone! with the fovereign of the world by your fide!

> [They go out.

Sac. How could my companions both leave me?

Dufbm. Sweet maid, give yourfelf no concern. Am not I, who humbly folicit your favour, prefent in the room of them ? - [A/ide.]I muft declare my paffion.-- [Aloud.] --Why fhould not I, like them, wave this fan of lotos leaves, to raife cool breezes and diffipate your uneafinefs? Why hhould not I, like them, lay foftly in my lap thofe feet, red as water lilies, and prefs them, O my charmer, to relieve your pain?

Sac. I fhould offend againft myfelf, by receiving homage from a perfon entitled to my refpect.
[She rifes, and walks flowly through weaknefs.
$D u / b m$. The noon, my love, is not yet paffed; and your fweet limbs are weak. Having left that couch where frefh flowers covered your bofom, you can ill fuftain this intenfe heat with fo languid a frame. [He gently drazus ber back.

Sac. Leave me, oh leave me. I am not, indeed, my own miftrefs, or - the two damfels were only appointed to attend me. What can I do at prefent?

Du/bm. [Afide.] Fear of difpleafing her makes me bafhful.

Sac. [Overbearing bim.] The king cannot give offence. It is my unhappy fate only that I accufe.

Du/bm. Why fhould you accufe fo favourable a deftiny?

Sac. How rather can I help blaming it, fince it has permitted my heart to be affected by amiable qualities, without having left me at my own difpofal?

Dufbm. [Afide.] One would, imagine that the charming fex, inftead of being, like us, tormented with love, kept love himfelf within their hearts, to torment him with delay.
[Sacontalá going out.

Du/bm. [Afide.] How ! muft I then fail of attaining felicity?
[Following ber, and catcbing the fiirt of her mantle.
Sac. [Turning back.] Son of Puru, preferve thy reafon; oh! preferve it.- The hermits are bufy on all fides of the grove.

Duflom. My charmer, your fear of them is vain. Canna himfelf, who is deeply verfed in the fcience of law, will be no obftacle to our union. Many daughters of the holieft men have been married by the ceremony called Gándharva, as it is practifed by Indra's band, and even their fathers have approved them.-[Looking round.]-What fay you? are you ftill inflexible? Alas! I muft then depart.
> [Going from her a few paces, then looking back.

Sac. [Moving alfo a few fleps, aud then turning back ber face.] Though I have refufed compliance, and have only allowed you to converfe with me for a moment, yet, O fon of Purulet not Sacontalá be wholly forgotten.

Duflom. Enchanting girl, fhould you be removed to the ends of the world, you will be fixed in this heart, as the fhade of a lofty tree remains with it even when the day is departed.

Sac. [Going out, afide.] Since I have heard his proteftations, my feet move, indeed, but without advancing. I will conceal myfelf behind thofe flowering Curuvacas, and thence I fhall fee the refult of his paffion.

> [Sbe bides berrelf bebind the Jorubs.

Dufbm. [Afide.] Can you leave me, beloved Sacontalá ; me who am all affection? Could you not have tarried a fingle moment? Soft is your beautiful frame, and indicates a benevolent foul; yet your heart is obdurate: as the tender Sirifha hangs on a hard ftalk.

Sac. [Afide.] I really have now loft the power of departing.

Du/bm. [A/ide.] What can I do in this retreat fince my darling has left it?-[Mufing and looking round.]-Ah! my departure is happily delayed.-Here lies her bracelet of flowers, exquifitely perfumed by the root of Usira which had been fpread on her bofom: it has fallen from her delicate wrift, and is become a new chain for my heart.
[Taking up the bracelet with reverence. Sac. [Afide, looking at ber hand.] Ah me! fuch was my languor, that the filaments of lotos ftalks which bound my arm dropped on the ground unperceived by me.

Dufom. [Afide, placing it in his bofom.] Oh! how delightful to the touch!-From this ornament of your lovely arm, O my darling, though it be inanimate and fenfelefs, your unhappy lover has regained confidence-a blifs which you refufed to confer.

Sac. [Afide.] I can fay here no longer. By this pretext I may return.

[Going Jlowly towards bim.

Dulbom. [With rapture.] Ah! the emprefs of my foul again bleffes thefe eyes. After all my mifery I was deftined to be favoured by indulgent heaven.-The bird Chátac, whofe throat was parched with thirft, fupplicated for a drop of water, and fuddenly a cool fream poured into his bill from the bounty of a frefh cloud.

Sac. Mighty king, when I had gone half way to the cottage, I perceived that my bracelet of thin ftalks had fallen from my wrift ; and I return becaufe my heart is almoft convinced that you muft have feen and taken it. Reftore it, I humbly entreat, left you expofe both yourfelf and me to the cenfure of the hermits.

Dufbm. Yes, on one condition I will return it.
Sac. On what condition? Speak-
Dufbm. That I may replace it on the wrift to which it belongs.

Sac. [Afide.] I have no alternative.
[Approaching bim.
$D u f / m$. But in order to replace it, we muft both be feated on that fmooth rock.
[Both Jit down

[^1]Dufbm. [Taking her hand.] O exquifite foftnefs! This hand has regained its native ftrength and beauty, like a young fhoot of Cámalatà : or it refembles rather the god of love himfelf, when, having been confumed by the fire of Hara's wrath, he was reftored to life by a fhower of nectar fprinkled by the immortals.

Sac. [Prefing bis hand.] Let the fon of my lord make hafte to tie on the bracelet.

Dufbm. [Afide, with rapture.] Now I am truly bleffed.-That phrafe, the fon of my lord, is applied only to a hufband.-[Aloud.]-My charmer, the clafp of this bracelet is not eafily loofened : it muft be made to fit you better.

Sac. [Smiling.] As you pleafe.
Dufbm. [2uitting ber hand.] Look, my darling: this is the new moon which left the firmament in honour of fuperior beauty, and, having defcended on your enchanting wrift, has joined both its horns round it in the fhape of a bracelet.

Sac. I really fee nothing like a moon: the breeze, I fuppofe, has fhaken fome duft from the lotos flower behind my ears, and that has obfcured my fight.

Dufbm. [Smiling.] If you permit me, I will blow the fragrant duft from your eye.

Sac. It would be a kindnefs; but I cannot truft you.

Dufbm. Oh! fear not, fear not. A new fervant never tranfgreffes the command of his miftrefs.

Sac. But a fervant over-affiduous deferves no confidence.

Dufbm. [Afide.] I will not let lip this charming occafion.- [Attempting to raife ber headSacontalá faintly repels him, but fits fill.] - O damfel with an antelope's eyes, be not apprehenfive of my indifcretion.-- [Sacontalá looks up for a moment, and then bafbfully drops her head -Dufhmanta, afide, gently raijing her head.]-: That lip, the foftnefs of which is imagined, not proved, feems to pronounce, with a delightful tremour, its permiffion for me to allay my thirft.

Sac. The fon of my lord feems inclined to break his promife.

Dufbm. Beloved, I was deceived by the proximity of the lotos to that eye which equals it in brightnefs. [He blows gently on her eye.

Sac. Well: now I fee a prince who keeps his word as it becomes his imperial character. Yet I am really afhamed that no defert of mine entitles me to the kind fervice of my lord's fon.

Dufbom. What reward can I defire, except that which I confider as the greateft, the fragrance of your delicious lip?

Sac. Will that content you?

Dufbm. The bee is contented with the mere odour of the water lily.

Sac. If he were not, he would get no remedy.
Dufom. Yes, this and this-[Kifing ber eagerly.
Bebind the fcenes. Hark! the Chacravaca is calling her mate on the bank of the Málini : the night is beginning to fpread her fhades.

Sac. [Liftening alarmed.] O fon of my lord, the matron Gautamí approaches to enquire after my health. Hide yourfelf, I entreat, behind yon trees.

Duflom. I yield to neceffity. [He retires.
Gautami enters with a vafe in her band.
Gout. [Looking anxioufly at Sacontalá.] My child, here is holy water for thee.-What! haft thou no companion here but the invifible gods; thou who art fo much indifpofed ?

Sac. Both Priyamvadá and Anufúyá are juit gone down to the river.

Gaut. [Sprinkling ber.] Is thy fever, my child, a little abated ?
[Feeling her band.
Sac. Venerable matron, there is a change for the better.

Gaut. Then thou art in no danger. Mayft thou live many years! The day is departing: let us both go to the cottage.

Sac. [Afide, rifing Rowly.] O my heart, no fooner hadft thou begun to tafte happinefs, than the occafion nlipped away! [She advances a ferw Aeps, and returns to the arbour.]-O bower of twining plants, by whom my forrows have been difpelled, on thee I call; ardently hoping to be once more happy under thy fhade.
[She goes out with Gautami.
Dufbm. [Returning to the bower, and fighing.] How, alas, have my defires been obftructed!Could I do lefs than kifs the lips of my charmer, though her modeft cheeks were half averted; lips, whofe fweetnefs had enchanted me, even when they pronounced a denial?-Whither now can I go? I will remain a while in this arbour of creepers, which my darling's prefence has il-fuminated.--[Looking round.]-Yes; this is her feat on the rock, fpread with bloffoms, which have been preffed by her delicate limbs.-Here lies her exquifite love letter on the leaf of a water lily; here lay her bracelet of tender filaments which had fallen from her fweet wrift. - Though the bower of twining Vétafas be now defolate, fince my charmer has left it, yet, while my eyes are fixed on all thefe delightful memorials of her, I am unable to depart.- [ Mu/ing.]-Ah! how imperfectly has this affair been conducted by a lover, like me, who, with his darling by his fide, has let the occafion flip.-Should Sacontalá vifit once more this calm retreat, the opportunity fhall not pafs again unimproved : the plear fures of youth are by nature tranfitory. -Thus my foolifh heart forms refolutions, while it is diftracted by the fudden interruption of its hap + pinefs. Why did it ever allow me to quit without effect the prefence of my beloved?

Behind the fcenes. O king, while we are beginning our evening facrifice, the figures of blood-thirfty demons, embrowned by clouds collected at the departure of day, glide over the facred hearth, and fpread confternation around.

Dufbm. Fear not, holy men.- Your king will protect you, [He goes out.

ACT IV.

SCENE- $A$ Lawn before the Cottage.

The two damfels are difcovered gathering fowers.
Anufíyáo

O MY Priyamvadá, though our fweet friend has been happily married, according to the rites of Gandharvas, to a bridegroom equal in rank and accomplifhments, yet my affectionate heart is not wholly free from care; and one doubt gives me particular uneafinefs.

Pri. What doubt, my Anufúyá?
Anu. This morning the pious prince was difmiffed with gratitude by our hermits, who had then completed their myftick rites: he is now gone to his capital, Haftinápura, where, furrounded by a hundred women in the receffes of his palace, it may be doubted whether he will remember his charming bride.

Pri. In that refpect you may be quite eafy. Men, fo well informed and well educated as he, can never be utterly deftitute of honour.-We have another thing to confider. When our father Canna fhall return from his pilgrimage, and fhall hear what has paffed, I cannot tell how he may receive the intelligence.

Anu. If you afk my opinion, he will, I think, approve of the marriage.

Pri. Why do you think fo?
Anu. Becaufe he could defire nothing better, than that a hufband fo accomplifhed and fo exalted fhould take Sacontalá by the hand. It was, you know, the declared object of his heart, that fhe might be fuitably married ; and, fince heaven has done for him what he moft wifhed to do, how can he poffibly be diffatisfied ?

Pri. You reafon well; but-[Looking at her bafket.]-My friend, we have plucked a fufficient ftore of flowers to fcatter over the place of facrifice.

Anu. Let us gather more to decorate the temples of the goddeffes who have procured for Sacontalá fo much good fortune.
[They both gather more flowers,
Behind the fcenes. It is I-Hola!
Anu. [Liftening.] I hear the voice, as it feems, of a gueft arrived in the hermitage.

Pri. Let us haften thither. Sacontalá is now repofing; but though we may, when the wakes, enjoy her prefence, yet her mind will all day be abfent with her departed lord.

Anu. Be it fo; but we have occafion, you know, for all thefe flowers. [They advance.

Again behind the feenes. How! doft thou fhow no attention to a gueft? Then hear my imprecations - "He on whom thou art medi" tating, on whom alone thy heart is now fixed, " while thou neglecteft a pure gem of devotion " who demands hofpitality, fhall forget thee, " when thou feeft him next, as a man reftored " to fobriety forgets the words which he uttered " in a ftate of intoxication."
[Both damels look at each other with affliction.
Pri. Wo is me! Dreadful calamity! Our beloved friend has, through mere abfence of mind, provoked by her neglect, fome holy man who expected reverence.

Anu, [Looking.] It muft be fo; for the cholerick Durváfas is going haftily back.

Pri. Who elfe has power to confume, like raging fire, whatever offends him? Go, my Anufuyá; fall at his feet, and perfuade him, if poffible, to return: in the mean time I will prepare water and refrefhments for him.

Anu. I go with eagernefs. [She goes out.
Pri. [Advancing haftily, ber foot Jips.] Ah! through my eager hafte I have let the bafket fall; and my religious dutics muft not be poftponed. [She gathers frefle flowers.

> Anufúyá re-enters.

Anu. His wrath, my beloved, paffes all bounds.
-Who living could now appeafe him by the humbleft proftrations or entreaties? yet at laft he a little relented.

Pri. That little is a great deal for him.-But inform me how you foothed him in any degree.

Anu. When he pofitively refufed to come back, I threw myfelf at his feet, and thus addreffed him: " Holy fage, forgive, I entreat, " the offence of an amiable girl, who has the " higheft veneration for you, but was ignorant, " through diftraction of mind, how exalted a per"fonage was calling to her."

Pri. What then? What faid he?
Anu. He anfwered thus: "My word muft " not be recalled ; but the fpell which it has " raifed fhall be wholly removed when her lord " fhall fee his ring." Saying this, he difappeared.

Pri. We may now have confidence ; for before the monarch departed, he fixed with his own hand on the finger of Sacontalá the ring, on which we faw the name Dufhmanta engraved, and which we will inftantly recognize. On him therefore alone will depend the remedy for our misfortune.

Anu. Come, let us now proceed to the fhrines of the goddeffes, and implore their fuccour.
[Both advance.
Pri. [Looking.] See, my Anufuyá, where our beloved friend fits, motionless as a picture, fupporting her languid head with her left hand. With a mind fo intent on one object, fhe can pay no attention to herfelf, much lefs to a ftranger.

Anu. Let the horrid imprecation, Priyamvadá, remain a fecret between us two: we muft fpare the feelings of our beloved, who is naturally fufceptible of quick emotions.

Pri. Who would pour boiling water on the bloffom of a tender Mallicá?

A Pupil of Canna enters.

Pup. I am ordered by the venerable Canna, who is returned from the place of his pilgrimage, to obferve the time of the night, and am, therefore, come forth to fee how much remains of it. [Walking round, and obferving the beavens.] On one fide, the moon, who kindles the flowers of the Ofhadhi, has nearly funk in his weftern bed ; and, on the other, the fun, feated behind his charioteer Arun, is beginning his courfe: the luftre of them both is confpicuous, when they rife and when they fet ; and by their example fhould men be equally firm in profperous and in adverfe fortune.- The moon has now difappeared, and the night flower pleafes no more: it leaves only a remembrance of its odour, and languifhes like a tender bride whofe pain is intolerable in the abfence of her beloved.-The ruddy morn impurples the dew drops on the branches of yonder Vadarí ; the peacock, fhaking off fleep, haftens from the cottages of hermits interwoven with holy grafs; and yonder antelope, fpringing haftily from the place of facrifice, which is marked with his hoofs, raifes himfelf on high, and ftretches his graceful limbs. -How is the moon fallen from the fky with diminifhed beams! the moon who had fet his foot on the head of Suméru, king of mountains, and had climbed, feattering the rear of darknefs, even to the central palace of Vifhnu!-Thus do the great men of this world afcend with extreme labour to the fummit of ambition, but eafily and quickly defcend from it.

Anufúyá enters meditating.

Anu. [Afide.] Such has been the affection of Sacontalá, though fhe was bred in auftere devotion, averfe from fenfual enjoyments !-How unkind was the king to leave her !

Pup. [Afide.] The proper time is come for performing the hóma: I muft apprife our preceptor of it.
[He goes out.
Anu. The thades of night are difperfed; and I am hardly awake; but were I ever fo perfectly in my fenfes, what could I now do? My hands move not readily to the ufual occupations of the morning:-Let the blame be caft on love, on love only, by whom our friend has been reduced to her prefent condition, through a monarch who has broken his word.- Or does the imprecation of Durváfas already prevail?-How elfe could a virtuous king, who made fo folemn an engagement, have fuffered fo long a time to elapfe without fending even a meffage?--Shall we convey the fatal ring to him?-Or what expedient can be fuggefted for the relief of this incomparable girl, who mourns without ceafing? -Yet what fault has fhe committed ?-With all my zeal for her happinefs, I cannot fummon courage enough to inform our father Canna that the is pregnant. - What then, oh! what ftep can I take to relieve her anxiety?

Priyamvadá enters.

Pri. Come, Anufúyá, come quickly. They are making fuitable preparations for conducting Sacontalá to her hufband's palace.

Anu. [With furprife.] What fay you, my friend?

Pri. Hear me. I went juft now to Sacontalá, meaning only to afk if fhe had flept well-

Anu. What then? oh! what then?
Pri. She was fitting with her head bent on her knee, when our father Canna, entering her apartment, embraced and congratulated her." My fweet child," faid he, "there has been a " happy omen; the young Brahmen who offi" ciated in our morning facrifice, though his " fight was impeded by clouds of fmoke, drop-* " ped the clarified butter into the very centre of of the adorable flame.-Now, fince the pious act " of my pupil has profpered, my fofter child " muft not be fuffered any longer to languifh in " forrow ; and this day I am determined to fend " thee from the cottage of the old hermit who " bred thee up, to the palace of the monarch who " has taken thee by the hand."

Anu. My friend, who told Canna what paffed in his abfence?

Pri. When he entered the place where the holy fire was blazing, he heard a voice from heaven pronouncing divine meafures.-

Anu. [Amazed.] Ah! you aftonifh me.
Pri. Hear the celeftial verfe:-- K Know that "s thy adopted daughter, O pious Bráhmen, has " received from Dufhmanta a ray of glory de" ftined to rule the world; as the wood Sami " becomes pregnant with myfterious fire."

Anu. [Embracing Priyamvadá.] I am delighted, my beloved; I am tranfported with joy. But -fince they mean to deprive us of our friend fo foon as to-day, I feel that my delight is at leaft equalled by my forrow.

Pri. Oh! we muft fubmit patiently to the anguifh of parting. Our beloved friend will now be happy; and that fhould confole us.

Anu. Let us now make hafte to drefs her in bridal array. I have already, for that purpofe, filled the fhell of a cocoa nut, which you fee fixed on an Amra tree, with the fragrant duft of Nágacéfaras: take it down, and keep it in a frefh lotos leaf, whilft I collect fome Góráchana from the forehead of a facred cow, fome earth from confecrated ground, and fome frefh Cufa grafs, of which I will make a pafte to enfure good fortune.

Pri. By all means. [She takes down the per-fume.-Anufúyá goes out.
Behind the fcenes. O Gautamí, bid the two Mifras, Sárngarava and Sáradwata, make ready to accompany my child Sacontalá.

Pri. [Liftening.] Lofe no time, Anufúý́, lofe no time. Our father Canna is giving orders for the intended journey to Haftinápura.

Anufúyá re-enters with the ingredients of ber cbarm.
Anu. I am here: let us go, my Priyamvadá. [They both advance.
Pri. [Looking.] There ftands our Sacontalá, after her bath at funrife, while many holy women, who are congratulating her, carry bafket3 of hallowed grain.-Let us haften to greet her.

Enter Sacontalá, Gautamí, and female Hermits. Sac. I proftrate myfelf before the goddefs.

Gaut. My child, thou canft not pronounce too often the word goddefs: thus wilt thou procure great felicity for thy lord.

Herm. Mayft thou, O royal bride, be delivered of a hero!
[The Hermits go out.
Botb damfels. [Approaching Sacontalá.] Beloved friend, was your bath pleafant?

Sac. O! my friends, you are welcome: let us fit a while together. [They feat themfelves.

Anu. Now you muft be patient, whilf I bind on a charm to fecure your happinefs.

Sac. That is kind.-Much has been decided this day: and the pleafure of being thus attended by my fweet friends will not foon return.
[Wiping off ber tears.
Pri. Beloved, it is unbecoming to weep at a time when you are going to be fo happy. [Botb damfels burft into tears as they drefs ber.] -Your elegant perfon deferves richer apparel: it is now decorated with fuch rude flowers as we could procure in this foreft.

Canna's Pupil enters with rich clothes.
Pup. Here is a complete drefs. Let the queen wear it aufpicioully; and may her life be long!
[The women look with afoni/bment.
Gaut. My fon, Háríta, whence came this apparel?

Pup. From the devotion of our father Canna.

Gait. What doft thou mean?
Pup. Be attentive. The venerable fage gave this order: " Bring frefh flowers for Sacontalá " from the moft beautiful trees;" and fuddenly the woodnymphs appeared, raifing their hands, which rivalled new leaves in beauty and foftnefs. Some of them wove a lower mantle bright as the moon, the prefage of her felicity; another preffed the juice of Láchà to ftain her feet exquifitely red ; the reft were bufied in forming the gayeft ornaments ; and they eagerly fhowered their gifts on us.

Pri. [Looking at Sacontalá.] Thus it is, that even the bee, whofe neft is within the hollow trunk, does homage to the honey of the lotos flower.

Gaut. The nymphs muft have been commiffioned by the goddefs of the king's fortune, to predict the acceffion of brighter ornaments in his palace.
[Sacontalá looks modeft.
Pup. I muft haften to Canna, who is gone to bathe in the Málinì, and let him know the fignal kindnefs of the woodnymphs. LHe goes out.

Anu. My fweet friend, I little expected fo fplendid a drefs :-how fhall I adjuft it properly ? -[Confidering.]-Oh! my fkill in painting will fupply me with fome hints; and I will difpofe the drapery according to art.

Sac. I well know your affection for him.
VOL. VII. GG

Canna enters meditating.

Can. [Afide.] This day muit Sacontalá depart: that is refolved; yet my foul is fmitten with anguifh.-My feeech is interrupted by a torrent of tears, which my reafon fuppreffes and curns inward: my very fight is dimmed.Strange that the affiction of a forefter, retired from the haunts of men, fhould be fo exceffive ? -Oh, with what pangs muft they who are fathers of families, be afflicted on the departure of a daughter! [He walks round mufing.
Pri. Now, my Sacontalá, you are becomingly decorated: put on this lower veft, the gift of fylvan goddeffes.
[Sacontala rijes, and puts on the mantle.
Gout. My child, thy fpiritual father, whofe eyes overflow with tears of joy, flands defiring to embrace thee. Haften, therefore, to do him reverence. [Sacontalá modeftly bows to bim.
Can: Mayft thou be cherifhed by thy hufband, as Sarmifhthà was cherifhed by Yayáti! Mayft thou bring forth a fovereign of the world, as fhe brought forth Puru !

Gaut. This, my child, is not a mere benediction; it is a boon actually conferred.

Can. My beft beloved, come and walk with me round the facrificial fire.- [They all advance.] -May thefe fires preferve thee! Fires which fpring to their appointed fations on the holy hearth, and confume the confecrated wood, while the frefh blades of myfterious Cufa lie fcattered around them!-Sacramental fires, which deftroy fin with the rifing fumes of clarified butter![Sacontala walks with folemnity round the bearth.] -Now fet out, my darling, on thy aufpicious journey.-[Looking round.]-Where are the attendants, the two Mifras?

Enter Sárngarava and Sáradwata.
Both. Holy fage, we are here.
Can. My fon, Sárngarava, fhow thy fifter her way.

Sárn. Come, damfel.
[They all advance.
Can. Hear, all ye trees of this hallowed foreft; ye trees, in which the fylvan goddeffes have their abode; hear, and proclaim, that Sacontalá is going to the palace of her wedded lord; the who drank not, though thirfty, before you were watered; the who cropped not, through affection for you, one of your frefh leaves, though fhe would have been pleafed with fuch an ornament for her locks; the whofe chief delight was in the feafon when your branches are fpangled with flowers!

CHORUS of invifible Woodnymphs.

May her way be attended with profperity! May propitious breezes fprinkle, for her delight, the odoriferous duft of rich bloffoms! May pools of clear water, green with the leaves of the lotos, refrefh her as fhe walks! and may fhady branches be her defence from the fcorching funbeams!
[All liften with admiration.
Sarn. Was that the voice of the Cócila wifhing a happy journey to Sacontalá?-Or did the nymphs, who are allied to the pious inhabitants of thefe woods, repeat the warbling of the mufical bird, and make its greeting their own?

Gaut. Daughter, the fylvan goddeffes, who love their kindred hermits, have wifhed you profperity, and are entitled to humble thanks.

ESacontala walks round, bowing to the nympbs.
Sac. [Ajide to Priyamvadá.] Delighted as I $2 \mathrm{~m}, \mathrm{O}$ Priyamvadá, with the thought of feeing again the fon of my lord, yet, on leaving this grove, my early afylum, I am fcarce able to walk.

Pri. You lament not alone.-Mark the affliction of the foreft itfelf when the time of your departure approaches !- The female antelope browfes no more on the collected Cufa grafs; and the peahen ceafes to dance on the lawn: the very plants of the grove, whofe pale leaves fall on the ground, lofe their ftrength and their beauty.

Sac. Venerable father, fuffer me to addrefs this Mádhaví creeper, whofe red blofooms inflame the grove.

Can. My child, I know thy affection for it.
Sac. [Embracing the plant.] O moft radiant of twining plants, receive my embraces, and return them with thy flexible arms: from this day, though removed to a fatal diftance, I fhall for ever be thine.-O beloved father, confider this creeper as myfelf.

Can. My darling, thy amiable qualities have gained thee a hufband equal to thyfelf: fuch an event has been long, for thy fake, the chief object of my heart; and now, fince my folicitude for thy marriage is at an end, I will marry thy favourite plant to the bridegroom Amra, who fheds fragrance near her.--Proceed, my child, on thy journey.

Sac. [Approaching the two damfels.] Sweet friends, let this Mádhavi creeper be a precious depofit in your hands.

Anu. and Pri. Alas! in whofe care fhall we be left?
[They both rweep.
Can. Tears are vain, Anufúyá: our Sacontalá ought rather to be fupported by your firmnefs, than weakened by your weeping.
[All advance.

Sac. Father! when yon female antelope, who now moves flowly from the weight of the young ones with which fhe is pregnant, fhali be delivered of them, fend me, I beg, a kind meffage with tidings of her fafety.-DDo not forget.

Can. My beloved, I will not forget it.
Sac. [Advancing, then fopping.] Ah! what is it that clings to the fkirts of my robe, and detains me? [She turns round, and looks.
Can. It is thy adopted child, the little fawn, whofe mouth, when the fharp points of Cufa grafs had wounded it, has been fo often fmeared by thy hand with the healing oil of Ingudi ; who has been fo often fed by thee with a handful of Syámáka grains, and now will not leave the footfteps of his protectrefs.

Sac. Why doft thou weep, tender fawn, for me, who muft leave our common dwelling-place? -As thou waft reared by me when thou hadft loft thy mother, who died foon after thy birth, fo will my fofter-father attend thee, when we are feparated, with anxious care.--Return, poor thing, return-we muft part.
[She burfts into tears.
Can. Thy tears, my child, ill fuit the occafion: we fhall all meet again: be firm: fee the direct road before thee, and follow it.-When the big tear lurks beneath thy beautiful eyelafhes, let thy refolution check its firft efforts to difengage itfelf.-In thy paffage over this earth, where the paths are now high, now low, and the true path feldom diftinguifhed, the traces of thy feet muft needs be unequal ; but virtue will prefs thee right onward.

Sárn. It is a facred rule, holy fage, that a benevolent man fhould accompany a traveller till he meet with abundance of water; and that rule you have carefully obferved: we are now near the brink of a large pool. Give us, therefore, your commands, and return.

Can. Let us reft a while under the fhade of this Vata tree- - [They all go to the Joade.] What meffage can I fend with propriety to the noble Dufhmanta?
[He meditates.
Anu. [Afide to Sacontalá.] My beloved friend, every heart in our afylum is fixed on you alone, and all are afflicted by your departure.-Look; the bird Chacraváca, called by his mate, who is almoft hidden by water lilies, gives her no anfwer; but having dropped from his bill the fibres of lotos ftalks which he had plucked, gazes on you with inexpreffible tendernefs.

Can. My fon Sárngarava, remember, when thou fhalt prefent Sacontalá to the king, to addrefs him thus, in my name: "Confidering us " hermits as virtuous, indeed, but rich only in " devotion, and confidering alfo thy own exalt"ed birth, retain thy love for this girl, which " arofe in thy bofom without any interference of " her kindred; and look on her among thy " wives with the fame kindnefs which they ex" perience: more than that cannot be demand"ed; fince particular affection muft depend on "the will of heaven."

Sárn. Your meffage, venerable man, is deeply rooted in my remembrance.

Can. [Looking tenderly at Sacontalá.] Now, my darling, thou too muft be gently admonifh-ed.-We, who are humble forefters, are yet acquainted with the world which we have forCaken.

Sárn. Nothing can be unknown to the wife.
Can. Hear, my daughter-When thou art fettled in the manfion of thy hufband, fhow due reverence to him, and to thofe whom he reveres: though he have other wives, be rather an affectionate handmaid to them than a rival.- Should he difpleafe thee, let not thy refentment lead thee to difobedience. - In thy conduct to thy domefticks be rigidly juft and impartial ; and feek not eagerly thy own gratifications.- By fuch behaviour young women become refpectable; but perverfe wives are the bane of a family.-What thinks Gautamí of this leffon?

Gout. It is incomparable:-my child, be fure to remember it.

Can. Come, my beloved girl, give a parting embrace to me and to thy tender companions.

Sac. Muft Anufúyá and Priyamvadá return to the hermitage?

Can. They too, my child, muft be fuitably married; and it would not be proper for them yet to vifit the city; but Gautamí will accompany thee.

Sac. [Embracing bim.] Removed from the bofom of my father, like a young fandal tree, rent from the hills of Malaya, how fhall I exift in a ftrange foil?

Can. Be not fo anxious. When thou fhalt be miftrefs of a family, and confort of a king, thou mayt, indeed, be occafionally perplexed by the intricate affairs which arife from exuberance of wealth, but wilt then think lightly of this tranfient affliction, efpecially when thou fhalt have a fon (and a fon thou wilt have) bright as the rifing day-ftar. - Know alfo with certainty, that the body murt neceffarily, at the appointed moment, be feparated from the foul: who, then, can be immoderately afflicked, when the weaker bounds of extrinfick relations are loofened, or even broken.

Sac. [Falling at his feet.] My father, I thus humbly declare my veneration for you.

Can. Excellent girl, may my effort for thy happinefs prove fuccefsful.

Sac. [Approaching her two companions.] Come, then, my beloved friends, embrace me together. [They embrace ber.
Anu. My friend, if the virtuous monarch fhould not at once recollect you, only fhow him the ring on which his own name is engraved.

Sac. [Starting.] My heart flutters at the bare apprehenfion which you have raifed.

Pri. Fear not, fweet Sacontalá: love always raifes ideas of mifery, which are feldom or never realifed.

Sárn. Holy fage, the fun has rifen to a confiderable height: let the queen haften her departure.

Sac. [Again embracing Canna.] When, my father, oh! when again fhall I behold this afylum of virtue?

Can. Daughter, when thou fhalt long have been wedded, like this fruitful earth, to the pious monarch, and fhalt have borne him a fon, whofe car fhall be matchlefs in battle, thy lord fhall transfer to him the burden of empire, and thou, with thy Dufhmanta, fhalt again feek tranquillity, before thy final coparture, in this loved and confecrated grove.

Gaut. My child, the proper time for our journey paffes away rapidly: fuffer thy father to return.--Go, venerable man, go back to thy manfion, from which the is doomed to be fo long abfent.

Can. Sweet child, this delay interrupts my religious duties.

Sac. You, my father, will perform them long without forrow ; but I, alas! am deftined to bear affliction.

Can. O! my daughter, compel me not to neglect my daily devotions.--[Sighing.]-No, my forrow will not be diminifhed.-Can it ceafe, my beloved, when the plants which rife luxuriantly from the hallowed grains which thy hand has ftrown before my cottage, are continually in my fight? Go, may thy journey profper. [Sacontalá goes out with Gautamí and the two Mifras.
Both damjels. [Looking after Sacontalá with anguijb.] Alas! alas! our beloved is hidden by the thick trees.

Can. My children, fince your friend is at length departed, check your immoderate grief, and follow me. [Tbey all turn back.

Both. Holy father, the grove will be a perfect vacuity without Sacontalá.

Can. Your affection will certainly give it that appearance.——[He walks round meditating.]Ah me!-Yes; at laft my weak mind has attained its due firmnefs after the departure of my Sacontalá. - In truth a daughter mult fooner or later be the property of another; and, having now fent her to her lord, I find my foul clear and undifturbed, like that of a man who has rer ftored to its owner an ineftimable depofit which he long had kept with folicitude.
[They go out.

ACT V .

SCENE-The Palace.

An old Chamberlain, fighing.

Cbamberlain.

ALAS! what a decrepit old age have I attain-ed!--This wand, which I firft held for the difcharge of my cuftomary duties in the fecret apartments of my prince, is now my fupport, whilf I walk feebly through the multitude of years which I have paffed.-I mult now mention to the king, as he goes through the palace, an event which concerns himfelf: it muit not be delayed.-[Advancing fowly.]-What is it? -Oh! I recollect: the devout pupils of Canna defire an audience.-How ftrange a thing is human life! - The intellects of an old man feem at one time luminous, and then on a fudden are involved in darknefs, like the flame of a lamp at the point of extinction - [He walks round and looks. ]-There is Dufhmanta: he has been attending to his people, as to his own family; and now with a tranquil heart feeks a folitary chamber; as an elephant the chief of his herd, having grazed the whole morning, and being heated by the meridian fun, repairs to a cool fation during the oppreffive heats.- Since the king is juft rifen from his tribunal, and muft be fatigued, I am almoft afraid to inform him at prefent that Canna's pupils are arrived : yet how fhould they who fupport nations enjoy reft? - The fun yokes his bright fteeds for the labour of many hours; the gale breathes by night and by day; the prince of ferpents continually fuftains the weight of this earth; and equally inceffant is the toil of that man, whofe revenue arifes from a fixth part of his people's income. [He walks about.

Enter Dufhmanta, Mádhavya, and Attendants.
Dufbm. [Looking opprefled with bufinefs.] Every petitioner having attained juftice, is departed happy; but kings who perform their duties confcientioufly are afflicted without end.The anxiety of acquiring dominion gives extreme pain; and when it is firmly eftablifhed, the cares of fupporting the nation inceffantly harafs the fovereign; as a large umbrella, of which a man carries the faff in his own hand, fatigues while it fhades him.

Bebind the fcenes. May the king be victorious!

> Two Bards repeat fanzas.

Firft Bard. Thou feekelt not thy own pleafure: no ; it is for the people that thou art haraffed from day to day. Such, when thou waft created, was the difpofition implanted in thy foul! Thus a branchy tree bears on his head the fcorching funbeams, while his broad fhade allays the fever of thofe who feek fhelter under him.

Second Bard. When thou wieldeft the rod of juftice, thou bringeft to order all thofe who have deviated from the path of virtue: thou biddeft contention ceafe : thou waft formed for the prefervation of thy people: thy kindred poffefs, indeed, confiderable wealth; but fo boundlefs is thy affection, that all thy fubjects are confidered by thee as thy kinfmen.

Dufbm. [Liftening.] That fweet poetry refrefhes me after the toil of giving judgements and publick orders.

Mádh. Yes; as a tired bull is refrefhed when the people fay, "There goes the lord of cattle."

Dufom. [Smiling.] Oh! art thou here, my friend: let us take our feats together.

[The king and Mádhavya fit down.-

 Mufick bebind the fcenes.Mádh. Liften, my royal friend. I hear a welltuned Vínà founding, as if it were in concert. with the lutes of the gods, from yonder apart-ment.-The queen Hanfamatì is preparing, I imagine, to greet you with a new fong.

Du/bm. Be filent, that I may liften.
Cbam. [Afide.] The king's mind feems intent on fome other bufinefs. I muft wait his leifure.
[Retiring on one fide.
SONG. [Behind the foenes.]
"Sweet bee, who, defirous of extracting frefh " honey, waft wont to kifs the foft border of the " new-blown Amra flower, how canft thou now " be fatisfied with the water lily, and forget the " firft object of thy love ?" $D u \int b$. The ditty breathes a tender paffion.
Mádh. Does the king know its meaning? It is too deep for me.

Dufbm. [Smiling.] I was once in love with Hanfamatì, and am now reproved for continuing fo long abfent from her.-Friend Mádhavya, inform the queen in my name that i feel the reproof.

Mádh. As the king commands; but-[Rijing flowly.]-My friend, you are going to feize a fharp lance with another man's hand. I cannot relifh your commiffion to an enraged wo-man.-A hermit cannot be happy till he has taken leave of all paffions whatever.

Duflom. Go, my kind friend : the urbanity of thy difcourfe will appeafe her.

Mádh. What an errand!
[He goes out.

Dufbm. [Afide.] Ah! what makes me fo melancholy on hearing a mere fong on abfence, when I am not in fact feparated from any real object of my affection ?-Perhaps the fadnefs of men, otherwife happy, on feeing beautiful forms and liftening to fweet melody, arifes from fome faint remembrance of paft joys and the traces of connections in a former ftate of exiftence.
[He fits penfive and Sorrowful.
Cbam. [Advancing bumbly.] May our fovereign be victorious!-Two religious men, with fome women, are come from their abode in a foreft near the Snowy Mountains, and bring a meffage from Canna.- The king will command.

Dufbm. [Surprifed.] What! are pious hermits arrived in the company of women?

Cham. It is even fo.
Dufbom. Order the prieft Sómaratá, in my name, to fhew them due reverence in the form appointed by the Véda; and bid him attend me. I fhall wait for my holy guefts in a place fit for their reception.

Cham. I obey. [He goes out.
$D u / b m$. Wardour, point the way to the hearth of the confecrated fire.

Ward. This, O king, this is the way.- $[\mathrm{He}$ walks before.] -Here is the entrance of the hallowed enclofure ; and there ftands the venerable cow to be milked for the facrifice, looking bright from the recent fprinkling of myftick water.Let the king afcend.
[Durhmanta is raifed to the place of facrifice on the boulders of his Wardours.
$D u / b m$. What meffage can the pious Canna have fent me?-Has the devotion of his pupils been impeded by evil fpirits-or by what other calamity?-Or has any harm, alas! befallen the poor herds who graze in the hallowed foreft? Or have the fins of the king tainted the flowers and fruits of the creepers planted by female hermits? - My mind is entangled in a labyrinth of confufed apprehenfions.

Ward. What our fovereign imagines, cannot poffibly have happened; fince the hermitage has been rendered fecure from evil by the mere found of his bowftring. The pious men, whom the king's benevolence has made happy, are come, I prefume, to do him homage.

Enter Sárngarava, Sáradwata and Gautamí, leading Sacontala by the band; and before them the old Chamberlain and the Prieft.
Cham. This way, refpectable ftrangers; come this way.

Sárn. My friend Sáradwata, there fits the king of men, who has felicity at command, yet fhows equal refpect to all : here no fubject, even of the loweft clafs, is received with contempt.

Neverthelefs, my foul having ever been free from attachment to worldly things, I confider this hearth, although a crowd now furround it, as the fation merely of confecrated fire.

Sárad. I was not lefs confounded than yourfelf on entering the populous city; but now I look on it, as a man juft bathed in pure water, on a man fmeared with oil and duf, as the pure on the impure, as the waking on the fleeping, as the free man on the captive, as the independent on the flave.

Prieft. Thence it is, that men, like you two, are fo elevated above other mortals.

Sac. [Perceiving a bad omen.] Venerable mother, I feel my right eye throb! What means this involuntary motion?

Gaut. Heaven avert the omen, my fweet child! May every delight attend thee!
[They all advance.
Prieft. [Shewing the king to them.] There, holy men, is the protector of the people; who has taken his feat, and expects you.

Sárn. This is what we wifhed ; yet we have no private intereft in the bufinefs. It is ever thus: trees are bent by the abundance of their fruit ; clouds are brought low, when they teem with falubrious rain ; and the real benefactors of mankind are not elated by riches.

Ward. O king, the holy guefts appear before you with placid looks, indicating their affection.

Dufom. [Gazing at Sacontalá.] Ah! what damfel is that, whofe mantle conceals the far greater part of her beautiful form?-She looks, among the hermits, like a frefh green bud among faded and yellow leaves.

Ward. This at leaft, O king, is apparent ; that fhe has a form which deferves to be feen more diftinctly.
$D u / b m$. Let her ftill be covered: fhe feems pregnant ; and the wife of another muft not be feen even by me.

Sac. [Afide, with her band to ber bofom.] O my heart, why doft thou palpitate?-Remember the beginning of thy lord's affection, and be tranquil.

Prieft. May the king profper! The refpectable guefts have been honoured as the law ordains; and they have now a meffage to deliver from their fpiritual guide: let the king deign to hear it.

Dufbm. [With reverence.] I am attentive.
Both Mifras. [Extending their bands.] Victory attend thy banners !

Dufbm. I refpectfully greet you both.
Both. Bleffings on our fovereign!
Dufbm. Has your devotion been uninterrupted ?

Sárn. How fhould our rites be difturbed, when thou art the preferver of all creatures? How, when the bright fun blazes, fhould darknefs cover the world?

Dujbm. [Afide.] The name of royalty produces, I fuppofe, all worldly advantages! -[Aloud.]-Does the holy Canna then profper ?

Sarn. O king, they who gather the fruits of devotion may command profperity. He firft inquires affectionately whether thy arms are fuccefsful, and then addreffes thee in thefe words:-

Dufbm. What are his orders?
Sárn. "The contract of marriage, recipro" cally made between thee and this girl, my " daughter, I confirm with tender regard ; fince " thou art celebrated as the moft honourable of " men, and my Sacontala is Virtue herfelf in a " human form, no blafphemous complaint will " henceforth be made againft Brahmá for fuffer" ing difcordant matches: he has now united a "bride and bridegroom with qualities equally " tranfcendent.-Since, therefore, the is preg" nant by thee, receive her in thy palace, that " fhe may perform, in conjunction with thee, " the duties prefcribed by religion."

Gaut. Great king, thou haft a mild afpect; and I wifh to addrefs thee in few words.

Dufbm. [Smiling.] Speak, venerable matron.

Gaut. She waited not the return of her fpiritual father; nor were thy kindred confulted by thee. You two only were prefent, when your nuptials were folemnized: now, therefore, converfe freely together in the abfence of all others.

Sac. [Afde.] What will my lord fay?
Dujbm. [Afide, perplexed.] How ftrange an adventure!

Sac. [Afide.] Ah me! how difdainfully he feems to receive the meffage!

Sárn. [Afide.] What means that phrafe which I overheard, " How ftrange an adventure?" -[Aloud.]-Monarch, thou knoweft the hearts of men. Let a wife behave ever fo difcreetly, the world will think ill of her, if fhe live only with her paternal kinfmen; and a lawful wife now requefts, as her kindred alfo humbly entreat, that whether fhe be loved or not, fhe may pafs her days in the manfion of her hufband.

Dufbom. What fayeft thou?-Am I the lady's hurband?

Sac. [Afide with anguifb.] O my heart, thy fears have proved juft.

Sárn. Does it become a magnificent prince to depart from the rules of religion and honour, merely becaufe he repents of his engagements ?

Duifbom. With what hope of fuccefs could this groundlefs fable have been invented ?

Sarn. [Angrily.] The minds of thofe whom power intoxicates are perpetually changing.
$D u / b m$. I am reproved with too great feverity.

Gout. [To Sacontalá.] Be not afhamed, my fweet child: let me take off thy mantle, that the king may recollect thee. [She unveils ber.

Dufbm. [Ajide, looking at Sacontalá.] While I am doubtful whether this unblemifhed beauty which is difplayed before me has not been poffeffed by another, I refemble a bee fluttering at the clofe of night over a bloffom filled with dew ; and in this fate of mind, I neither can enjoy nor forfake her.

Ward. [Afide to Dufhmanta.] The king beft knows his rights and his duties: but who would hefitate when a woman, bright as a gem, brings luftre to the apartments of his palace?

Sárn. What, O king, does thy ftrange filence import?

Duflom. Holy man, I have been meditating again and again, but have no recollection of my marriage with this lady. How then can I lay afide all confideration of my military tribe, and admit into my palace a young woman who is pregnant by another hufband?

Sac. [Afide,] Ah! wo is me.-Can there be a doubt even of our nuptials?- The tree of my hope, which had rifen fo luxuriantly, is at once broken down.

Sarn. Beware, left the godlike fage, who would have beftowed on thee, as a free gift, his ineftimable treafure, which thou hadft taken, like a bafe robber, fhould now ceafe to think of thee, who art lawfully married to his daughter, and fhould confine all his thoughts to her whom thy perfidy difgraces.

Sárad. Reft a while, my Sárngarava; and thou, Sacontalá, take thy turn to fpeak; fince thy lord has declared his forgetfulnefs.

Sac. [Afide.] If his affection has ceafed, of what ufe will it be to recall his remembrance of me?-Yet, if my foul muft endure torment, be it fo: I will fpeak to him.—— [Aloud to Dufh-manta.]-O my hufband !--[Paufing.]-Or (if the juft application of that facred word be ftill doubted by thee) O fon of Puru, is it becoming, that, having been once enamoured of me in the confecrated foreft, and having fhown the excefs of thy paffion, thou fhouldft this day deny me with bitter expreffions?

Dußbm. [Covering bis ears.] Be the crime removed from my foul!-Thou haft been inftructed for fome bafe purpofe to vilify me, and make me fall from the dignity which I have hitherto fupported; as a river which has burft its banks and altered its placid current, overthrows the trees that had rifen aloft on them.

Sac. If thou fayft this merely from want of recollection, I will reftore thy memory by producing thy own ring, with thy name engraved on it!

Dufbm. A capital invention!
Sac. [Looking at her finger.] Ah me! I have no ring. [She fixes ber eyes with anguifh on Gautamí.
Gaut. The fatal ring muft have dropped, my child, from thy hand, when thou tookeft up water to pour on thy head in the pool of Sachítírt'ha, near the ftation of Sacrávatára.

Dufbm. [Smiling.] So fkilful are women in finding ready excufes !

Sac. The power of Bramá muft prevail: I will yet mention one circumftance.

Dufbm. I muft fubmit to hear the tale.
Sac. One day, in a grove of Vétafas, thou tookeft water in thy hand from its natural vale of lotos leaves - Du/bm. What followed?

Sac. At that inftant a little fawn, which I had reared as my own child, approached thee ; and thou faidft with benevolence: " Drink-thou " firft, gentle fawn." He would not drink from the hand of a ftranger, but received water eagerly from mine; when thou faidf, with increaf-ing affection: "Thus every creature loves its "companions; you are both forefters alike, and " both alike amiable."

Dufbm. By fuch interefted and honied falfehoods are the fouls of voluptuaries enfnared!

Gaut. Forbear, illuftrious prince, to fpeak harthly. She was bred in a facred grove where fhe learned no guile.

Dufbm. Pious matron, the dexterity of females, even when they are untaught, appears in thofe of a fpecies different from our own.- What would it be if they were duly inftructed!-The female Cócilas, before they fly towards the firmament, leave their eggs to be hatched, and their young fed, by birds who have no relation to them.

Sac. [With anger.] Oh! void of honour, thou meafureft all the world by thy own bad heart. What prince ever refembled, or ever will refemble, thee, who weareft the garb of religion and virtue, but in truth art a bafe deceiver; like a deep well whofe mouth is covered with fmiling plants!

Dufom. [Afide.] The rufticity of her ecucation makes her fpeak thus angrily and inconfiftently with female decorum. - She looks indignant; her eye glows ; and her fpeech, formed of harfh terms, faulters as fhe utters them. Her lip, ruddy as the Bimba fruit, quivers as if it were nipped with froft; and her eyebrows, naturally fmooth and equal, are at once irregularly contracted.--Thus having failed in circumventing me by the apparent luftre of fimplicity, fhe has recourfe to wrath, and fnaps in two the bow of Cáma, which, if the had not belonged to another, might have wounded me.-[Aloud.]-The heart of Dufhmanta, young woman, is known to all; and thine is betrayed by thy prefent demeanor.

Sac. [Ironically.] You kings are in all cafes to be credited implicitly: you perfectly know the refpect which is due to virtue and to mankind ; while females, however modeft, however virtuous, know nothing, and fpeak nothing truly. -In a happy hour I came hither to feek the object of my affection : in a happy moment I received the hand of a prince defcended from Puru ; a prince who had won my confidence by the honey of his words, whilft his heart concealed the weapon that was to pierce mine.
[She bides her face and weeps.
Sárn. This infufferable mutability of the king's temper kindles my wrath. Henceforth let all be circumfpect before they form fecret connections : a friendfhip haftily contracted, when both hearts are not perfectly known, muft ere long become enmity.

Dufbon. Wouldit thou force me then to commit an enormous crime, relying folely on her fmooth fpeeches?

Sárn. [Scornfully.] Thou haft heard an an-fwer.-The words of an incomparable girl, who never learned what iniquity was, are here to receive no credit; while they, whofe learning confifts in accufing others, and inquiring into crimes, are the only perfons who fpeak truth!

Dufbm. O man of unimpeached veracity, I certainly am what thou defcribeft; but what would be gained by accufing thy female affociate?

Sárn. Eternal mifery.
Dufbm. No; mifery will never be the portion of Puru's defcendants.

Sárn. What avails our altercation ?-O king, we have obeyed the commands of our preceptor, and now return. Sacontala is by law thy wife, whether thou defert or acknowledge her ; and the dominion of a hufband is abfolute.Go before us, Gautamí.
[The two Mifras and Gautami returning.
Sac. I have been deceived by this perfidious man; but will you, my friends, will you alfo forfake me?
[Following them.
Gaut. [Looking back.] My fon, Sacontalá follows us with affectionate fupplications. What can fhe do here with a faithlefs hufband ; fhe who is all tendernefs?

Sárn. [Angrily to Sacontalá.] O wife, who feeft the faults of thy lord, doft thou defire independence? [Sacontalá ftops, and trembles. Sárad. Let the queen hear. If thou beeft what the king proclaims thee, what right hast thou to complain? But if thou knoweft the purity of thy own foul, it will become thee to wait as a handmaid in the manfion of thy lord. Stay, then, where thou art : we muft return to Canna.
$D u / b m$. Deceive her not, holy men, with vain expectations. The moon opens the night flower ; and the fun makes the water lily bloffom: each is confined to its own object: and thus a virtuous man abfains from any connection with the wife of another.

Sárn. Yet thou, O king, who feareft to offend religion and virtue, art not afraid to defert thy wedded wife ; pretending that the variety of thy publick affairs has made thee forget thy private contract.

Duflom. [To bis Prieft.] I really have no remembrance of any fuch engagement; and I afk thee, my fpiritual counfellor, whether of the two offences be the greater, to forfake my own wife, or to have an intercourfe with the wife of another?

Prieft. [After fome deliberation.] We may adopt an expedient between both.
$D u / b m$. Let my venerable guide command.
Prieft. The young woman may dwell till her delivery in my houfe.

Dufbm. For what purpofe?
Prieft. Wife aftrologers have affured the king; that he will be the father of an illuftrious prince, whofe dominion will be bounded by the weftern and eaftern feas: now, if the holy man's daughter fhall bring forth a fon whofe hands and feet bear the marks of extenfive fovereignty, I will do homage to her as my queen, and conduct her to the royal apartments; if not, fhe fhall return in due time to her father.

Dufbm. Be it as you judge proper.
Prieft. [To Sacontala.] This way, my daughter, follow me.

Sac. O earth! mild goddefs, give me a place within thy bofom!

She goes out weeping with the Prieft; while the two Mifras go out by a different way with Gautamí- Dufhmanta ftands meditating on the beauty of Sacontala ; but the imprecation ftill clouds bis memory.]
Behind the fcenes. Oh! miraculous event!
Dufbm. [Liftening.] What can have happened!

The Prieft re-enters.

Prieft. Hear, O king, the ftupendous event. When Canna's pupils had departed, Sacontalá, bewailing her adverfe fortune, extended her arms and wept; when-

Duflom. What then?

Prieft. A body of light, in a female fhape, defcended near Apfaraftirt'ha, where the nymphs of heaven are worfhiped; and having caught her haftily in her bofom, difappeared.
[ All exprefs aftonifbment.
Dufbm. I fufpected from the beginning fome work of forcery. -The bufinefs is over ; and it is needlefs to reafon more on it.-Let thy mind, Sómaráta, be at reft.

Prieft. May the king be victorious.
[He goes out.
Duflom. Chamberlain, I have been greatly haraffed; and thou, Warder, go before me to a place of repofe.

Ward. This way; let the king come this way.
Dufom. [Advancing, afide.] I cannot with all my efforts recollect my nuptials with the daughter of the hermit ; yet fo agitated is my heart, that it almoft induces me to believe her ftory.
[All go out.

ACT VI.

SCENE- $A$ Street.

Enter a Superintendent of Police with two Offe cers, leading a man with bis bands bound.

Firft Officer. Striking the prifoner.
TAKE that, Cumbhilaca, if Cumbhílaca be thy name; and tell us now where thou gotteft this ring, bright with a large gem, on which the king's name is engraved.

Cumbh. [Trembling.] Spare me, I entreat your honours to fpare me: I am not guilty of fo great a crime as you fufpect.

Firft Off. O diftinguifhed Bráhmen, didft thou then receive it from the king as a reward of fome important fervice?

Cumbh. Only hear me: I am a poor fifherman dwelling at Sacrávatára-Second Off. Did we afk, thou thief, about thy tribe or thy dwelling-place?

Sup. O Súchaca, let the fellow tell his own ftory.-Now conceal nothing, firrah.

Firft Off. Doft thou hear? Do as our mafter commands.

Cumbh. I am a man who fupport my family by catching fifh in nets, or with hooks, and by various other contrivances.

Sup. [Laugbing.] A virtuous way of gaining a livelihood!

Cumbh. Blame me not, mafter. The occupation of our forefathers, how low foever, muft not be forfaken ; and a man who kills animals for fale may have a tender heart though his act be cruel.

Sup. Go on, go on.
Cumbh. One day having caught a large Róhita fifh, I cut it open, and faw this bright ring in its fomach; but when I offered to fell it, I was apprehended by your honours. So far only am I guilty of taking the ring. Will you now continue beating and bruifing me to death ?

Sup. [Smelling the ring.] It is certain, Jaluca, that this gem has been in the body of a fifh. The cafe requires confideration; and I will mention it to fome of the king's houfehold.

Both Off: Come on, cutpurfe.
[They advance.
Sup. Stand here, Súchaca, at the great gate of the city, and wait for me, while I fpeak to fome of the officers in the palace.

Both Off. Go, Rajayucta. May the king favour thee. [Tbe Superintendent goes out.

VOL. VII.
I I

Second Off: Our mafter will ftay, I fear, a long while.

Firft Off: Yes; accefs to kings can only be had at their leifure.

Second Off. The tips of my fingers itch, my friend Jáluca, to kill this cutpurfe.

Cumbh. You would put to death an innocent man.

Firft Off. [Looking.] Here comes our mafter. -The king has decided quickly. Now, Cumbhílaca, you will either fee your companions again, or be the food of fhakàls and vultures.

The Superintendent re-enters.
Sup. Let the fifherman immediately
Cumbh. [In an agony.] Oh! I am a dead man.

Sup. --be difcharged.-Hola! fet him at liberty. The king fays he knows his innocence; and his fory is true.

Second Off. As our mafter commands. .-The fellow is brought back from the manfion of Yama, to which he was haftening.

> [Unbinding the fflberman.

Cumbb. [Bowing.] My lord, I owe my life to your kindnefs.

Sup. Rife, friend; and hear with delight that the king gives thee a fum of money equal to the full value of the ring: it is a fortune to a man in thy fation.
[Giving bim the money.
Cumbh. [With rapture.] I am tranfported with joy.

Firft Off: This vagabond feems to be taken down from the ftake, and fet on the back of a ftate elephant.

Second Off: The king, I fuppofe, has a great affection for his gem.

Sup. Not for its intrinfick value; but I gueffed the caufe of his ecftafy when he faw it.

Both Off. What could occafion it?
Sup. I fufpect that it called to his memory fome perfon who has a place in his heart; for though his mind be naturally firm, yet, from the moment when he beheld the ring, he was for fome minutes exceffively agitated.

Second Off. Our mafter has given the king extreme pleafure.

Firft Of: Yes; and by the means of this fifhcatcher.
[Looking fiercely at bim.
Cumbh. Be not angry-Half the money fhall be divided between you to purchafe wine.

Firft Off: Oh! now thou art our beloved friend.-Good wine is the firft object of our affection.-Let us go together to the vintners.
[They all go out.

SCENE-The Garden of the Palace.
The Nympb Mifracésí appears in the air.
Mifr. My firft tafk was duly performed when I went to bathe in the Nymphs' pool; and I now muft fee with my own eyes how the virtuous king is afflicted.-Sacontala is dear to this heart, becaufe the is the daughter of my beloved Ménacà, from whom I received both com-miffions.- [Sbe looks round.]-Ah! on a day full of delights the monarch's family feem oppreffed with fome new forrow.-By exerting my fupernatural power I could know what has paffed ; but refpect muft be fhown to the defire of Ménacà. I will retire, therefore, among thofe plants, and obferve what is done without being vifible. [She defcends, and takes her ftation.

Enter two Damelels, attendants on the God of Love.

Firf Damf. [Looking at an Amra flower.]The bloffoms of yon Amra, waving on the green ftalk, are frefh and light as the breath of this vernal month. I muft prefent the goddefs Retí with a bafket of them.

Second Damf. Why, my Parabhriticá, doft thou mean to prefent it alone?

Firft Damf. O my friend Madhucaricá, when a female Cócilà, which my name implies, fees a blooming Amra, fhe becomes entranced, and lofes her recollection.

Second Damf. [With tranSport.] What! is the feafon of fweets actually returned ?

Firft Damf. Yes; the feafon in which we muft fing of nothing but wine and love.

Second Damf. Support me, then, while I climb up this tree, and ftrip it of its fragrant gems, which we will carry as an offering to Cáma.

Firft Damf. If I affift, I muft have a moiety of the reward which the god will beftow.

Second Damf. To be fure, and without any previous bargain. We are only one foul, you know, though Brahmà has given it two bodies. -- [She climbs up, and gathers the fowers.]Ah! the buds are hardly opened.-Here is one a little expanded, which diffufes a charming odour-[Taking a bandfui of buds.]-This flower is facred to the god who bears a fifh on his banner.-O fweet bloffom, which I now confecrate, thou well deferveft to point the fixth arrow of Cámadéva, who now takes his bow to pierce myriads of youthful hearts.
[She throws down a blofjom.

The old Chamberlain enters.

Cbam. [Angrily.] Defift from breaking off thofe half-opened buds: there will be no jubilee this year; our king has forbidden it.

Both Damf. Oh! pardon us. We really knew not the prohibition.

Cham. You knew it not!-Even the trees which the fpring was decking, and the birds who perch on them, fympathize with our monarch. Thence it is, that yon buds, which have long appeared, fhed not yet their prolifick duft ; and the flower of the Curuvaca, though perfectly formed, remains veiled in a clofed chalice ; while the voice of the Cócilà, though the cold dews fall no more, is fixed within his throat ; and even Smara, the god of defire, replaces the fhaft halfdrawn from his quiver.

Mifr. [A/ide.] The king, no doubt, is conftant and tender-hearted.

Firft Damf. A few days ago, Mitravafu, the governor of our province, difpatched us to kifs the feet of the king, and we come to decorate his groves and gardens with various emblems : thence it is, that we heard nothing of his interdict.

Cham. Beware then of reiterating your offence.

Second Damf. To obey our lord will certainly be our delight; but if we are permitted to hear the ftory, tell us, we pray, what has induced our fovereign to forbid the ufual feftivity.

Mijr. [Afde.] Kings are generally fond of gay entertainments; and there muft be fome weighty reafon for the prohibition.

Cham. [Afide.] The affair is publick: why fhould I not fatisfy them?-[Aloud.]-Has not the calamitous defertion of Sacontalá reached your ears?

Firft Damf. We heard her tale from the governor, as far as the fight of the fatal ring.

Cham. Then I have little to add.-When the king's memory was reftored, by the fight of his gem, he inftantly exclaimed: " Yes, the in" comparable Sacontalá is my lawful wife ; and " when I rejected her, I had loft my reafon." He fhowed ftrong marks of extreme affliction and penitence ; and from that moment he has abhorred the pleafures of life. No longer does he exert his refpectable talents from day to day for the good of his people: he prolongs his nights without clofing his eyes, perpetually rolling on the edge of his couch ; and when he rifes, he pronounces not one fentence aptly; miftaking the names of the women in his apartments, and through diftraction, calling each of them Sacontalá: then he fits abafhed, with his head long bent on his knees.

Mifr. [A/ide.] This is pleafing to me, very pleafing.

Cbam. By reafon of the deep forrow which now prevails in his heart, the vernal jubilee has been interdicted.

Both Damf. The prohibition is highly proper.

Behind the fcenes. Make way! The king is paffing.

Dufhmanta enters in penitential weeds, preceded by a Warder, and attended by Mádhavya.
Cham. [Looking at the king.] Ah! how majeftick are noble forms in every habiliment!Our prince, even in the garb of affliction, is a venerable object.-Though he has abandoned pleafure, ornaments, and bufinefs; though he is become fo thin, that his golden bracelet falls loofened even down to his writt; though his lips are parched with the heat of his fighs, and his eyes are fixed open by long forrow and want of fleep, yet am I dazzled by the blaze of virtue which beams in his countenance like a diamond exquifitely polifhed.

Mifr. [Afide, gazing on Dufhmanta.] With good reafon is my beloved Sacontalá, though difgraced and rejected, heavily oppreffed with grief through the abfence of this youth.

Dufbm. [Advancing Jlowly in deep meditation.] When my darling with an antelope's eyes would have reminded me of our love, I was affuredly flumbering; but excefs of mifery has awakened me.

Mifr. [Afide.] The charming girl will at laft be happy.

Mádh. [A/ide.] This monarch of ours is caught again in the gale of affection; and I hardly know a remedy for his illnefs.

Cham. [Approaching Dufhmanta.] May the king be victorious !-Let him furvey yon fine woodland, thefe cool walks, and this blooming garden; where he may repofe with pleafure on banks of delight.

Dufbm. [Not attending to bim.] Warder, inform the chief minifter in my name, that having refolved on a long abfence from the city, I do not mean to fit for fome time in the tribunal; but let him write and difpatch to me all the cafes that may arife among my fubjects.

Ward. As the king commands.
[He goes out.
Duflom. [To the Chamberlain.] And thou, Párvatáyana, neglect not thy fated bufinefs.

Cham. By no means. [He goes out.
Mádh. You have not left a fly in the garden. -Amufe yourfelf now in this retreat, which feems pleafed with the departure of the dewy feafon.

Duflom. O Mádhavya, when perfons accufed of great offences prove wholly innocent, fee how their accufers are punifhed!-—A phrenfy obAtructed my remembrance of any former love for the daughter of the fage ; and now the heartborn god, who delights in giving pain, has fixed in his bow-ftring a new fhaft pointed with the bloffom of an Amra.-. The fatal ring having reftored my memory, fee me deplore with tears of repentance the lofs of my beft beloved, whom I rejected without caufe; fee me overwhelmed with forrow, even while the return of fpring fills the hearts of all others with pleafure.

Mádh. Be ftill, my friend, whilft I break Love's arrows with my flaff.

Dufbm. [Meditating.] Yes, I acknowledge the fupreme power of Brahmà.- [To Mádhavya,] Where now, my friend, fhall I, fit and recreate my fight with the flender fhrubs which bear a faint refemblance to the fhape of Sacontalá?

Mádh. You will foon fee the damfel fkilled in painting, whom you informed that you would fpend the forenoon in yon bower of Mádhavì creepers; and fhe will bring the queen's picture which you commanded her to draw.

Duflom. My foul will be delighted even by her picture.- Show the way to the bower.

Mádh. This way, my friend.-[They both advance, Mifracésì following them.] The arbour of twining Mádhavis, embellifhed with fragments of ftone like bright gems, appears by its pleafantnefs, though without a voice, to bid thee welcome.- Let us enter it, and be feated.
[They both fit down in the bower.
Mifr. [Afide.] From behind thefe branchy fhrubs I fhall behold the picture of my Sacon-talá.- I will afterwards haften to report the fincere affection of her hufband.
[She conceals herfelf.
Dufbm. [Sighing.] O my approved friend, the whole adventure of the hermitage is now frefh in my memory.-I informed you how deeply I was affected by the firft fight of the damfel; but when fhe was rejected by me you were not prefent.-Her name was often repeated by me (how, indeed, fhould it not?) in our converfation.-What! haft thou forgotten, as I had, the whole ftory?

Mifr. [Afde.] The fovereigns of the world muft not, I find, be left an inftant without the objects of their love.

Mádh. Oh, no: I have not forgotten it; but at the end of our difcourfe you affured me that your love tale was invented folely for your diverfion; and this, in the fimplicity of my heart, I believed.-Some great event feems in all this affair to be predeftined in heaven.

Mifr. [Afide.] Nothing is more true.

Mádh. What new pain torments you? Virtuous men fhould never be thus afflicted: the moft violent wind fhakes not mountains.

Dufbm. When I reflect on the fituation of your friend Sacontalá, who muft now be greatly affected by my defertion of her, I am without comfort.-She made an attempt to follow the Brahmens and the matron: Stay, faid the fage's pupil, who was revered as the fage himfelf: Stay, faid he, with a loud voice. Then once more fhe fixed on me, who had betrayed her, that celeftial face, then bedewed with gufhing tears; and the bare idea of her pain burns me like an envenomed javelin.

Mifr. [Afde.] How he afflicts himfelf! I really fympathize with him.

Mádb. Surely fome inhabitant of the heavens mult have wafted her to his manfion.

Mifr. [Afide.] To reject Șacontalá was, no doubt, the effect of a delirium, not the act of a waking man.

Mádh. If it be thus, you will foon meet her again.
Duflom. Alas! why do you think fo?

Mádb. Becaufe no father and mother can long endure to fee their daughter deprived of her hufband.

Dufbm. Was it fleep that impaired my memory? Was it delufion? Was it an error of my judgement? Or was it the deftined reward of my bad actions? Whatever it was, I am fenfible that, until Sacontalá return to thefe arms, I fhall be plunged in the abyfs of affliction.

Mádh. Do not defpair: the fatal ring is itfelf an example that the loft may be found.-Events which were foredoomed by Heaven muft not be lamented.

Dußbm. [Looking at his ring.] The fate of this ring, now fallen from a ftation which it will not eafily regain, I may at leaft deplore.-O gem, thou art removed from the foft finger, beautiful with ruddy tips, on which a place had been affigned thee; and, minute as thou art, thy bad qualities appear from the fimilarity of thy punifhment to mine.

Mifr. [Afide.] Had it found a/way to any other hand its lot would have been truly de-plorable.-O Ménacà, how wouldft thou be delighted with the converfation which gratifies my ears !

Mádb. Let me know, I pray, by what means the ring obtained a place on the finger of Sacontalá.

Dufom. You fhall know, my friend. - When I was coming from the holy foreft to my capital, my beloved, with tears in her eyes, thus addreffed me: "How long will the fon of my " lord keep me in his remembrance?"

Mádh. Well; what then?
Duffom. Then, fixing this ring on her lovely finger, I thus anfwered: "Repeat each day one " of the three fyllables engraved on this gem ; " and before thou haft fpelled the word Dufh" manta, one of my nobleft officers fhall attend " thee, and conduct my darling to her palace." -Yet I forgot, I deferted her in my phrenfy.

Mifr. [Afide.] A charming interval of three days was fixed between their feparation and their meeting, which the will of Brahmà renc̊ered unhappy.

Mádb. But how came the ring to enter, like a hook, into the mouth of a carp ?

Duflom. When my beloved was lifting water to her head in the pool of Sachitírt'ha, the ring muft have dropped unfeen.

Mádh. It is very probable.
Mifr. [Afide.] Oh! it was thence that the king, who fears nothing but injuftice, doubted the reality of his marriage ; but how, I wonder, could his memory be connected with a ring?
$D u / b m$. I am really angry with this gem.
Mádh. [Loughing.] So am I with this ftaff.

Dufbm. Why fo, Mádhavya?
Mádh. Becaufe it prefumes to be fo ftraight when I am fo crooked.-Impertinent ftick!

Dufbm. [Not attending to him.] How, O ring, couldft thou leave that hand adorned with foft long fingers, and fall into a pool decked only with water lilies?-The anfwer is obvious: thou art irrational.-But how could I, who was born with a reafonable foul, defert miy only beloved?

Mifr. [Afide.] He anticipates my remark.
Mádh. [Afide.] So; I muft wait here during his meditations, and perifh with hunger.

Dufbm. O my darling, whom I treated with difrefpect, and forfook without reafon, when will this traitor, whofe heart is deeply ftung with repentant forrow, be once more bleffed with a fight of thee?

[Holding it before bim.
Dufbm. [Gazing on it.] Yes; that is her face; thofe are her beautiful eyes; thofe her lips embellifhed with fmiles, and furpaffing the red luftre of the Carcandhu fruit : her mouth feems, though painted, to fpeak, and her countenance darts beams of affection blended with a variety of melting tints.

Mádb. Truly, my friend, it is a picture fweet as love itfelf: my eye glides up and down to feaft on every particle of it; and it gives me as much delight as if I were actually converfing: with the living Sacontalá.

Mifr. [A/ide.] An exquifite piece of painting :- My beloved friend feems to ftand before my eyes.
$D u f b m$. Yet the picture is infinitely below the original ; and my warm fancy, by fupplying its imperfections, reprefents, in fome degree, the lovelinefs of my darling.

Mifr. [Afide.] His ideas are fuitable to his exceffive love and fevere penitence.

Duflom. [Sighing.] Alas! I rejected her when fhe lately approached me, and now I do homage to her picture; like a traveller who negligently paffes by a clear and full rivulet, and foon ardently thirfts for a falfe appearance of water on the fandy defert.

Mádh. There are fo many female figures on this canvas, that I cannot well diftinguifh the lady Sacontalá.

Mifr. [Afide.] The old man is ignorant of her tranfcendent beauty; her eyes, which fafcinated the foul of his prince, never fparkled, I fuppofe, on Mádhavya.
$D u \mathrm{Jbm}$. Which of the figures do you conceive intended for the queen?

Mádh. [Examining the picture.] It is fhe, I imagine, who looks a little fatigued; with the ftring of her veft rather loofe; the flender ftalks of her arms falling languidly; a few bright drops on her face, and fome flowers dropping from her untied locks. That muft be the queen; and the reft, I fuppofe, are her damfels.
$D u / b m$. You judge well; but my affection requires fomething more in the piece. Befides, through fome defect in the colouring, a tear feems trickling down her cheek, which ill fuits the ftate in which I defired to fee her painted. --[To the Damfel.]-The picture, O Chaturicà, is unfinifhed.-GGo back to the painting room and bring the implements of thy art.

Damf. Kind Mádhavya, hold the picture while I obey the king.

Dufbm. No; I will hold it.
[He takes the picture; and the Damjel goes out.
Mádh. What elfe is to be painted ?
Mifr. [A/ide.] He defires, I prefume, to add all thofe circumftances which became the fituation of his beloved in the hermitage.

Duflom. In this landfcape, my friend, I wifh to fee reprefented the river Malinì, with fome amorous Flamingos on its green margin; farther back muft appear fome hills near the mountain Himálaya, furrounded with herds of Chamaras; and in the foreground, a dark fpreading tree, with fome mantles of woven bark fufpended on its branches to be dried by the funbeams; while a pair of black antelopes couch in its fhade, and the female gently rubs her beautiful forehead on the horn of the male.
voL. vil. K K

Mádh. Add what you pleafe; but, in my judgement, the vacant places fhould be filled with old hermits, bent, like me, towards the ground.

Duflom. [Not attending to bim.] Oh! I had forgotten that my beloved herfelf muft have fome new ornaments.

Mádh. What, I pray?
Mifr. [Afide.] Such, no doubt, as become a damfel bred in a foreft.

Dufom. The artift had omitted a Siríha flower with its peduncle fixed behind her foft ear, and its filaments waving over part of her cheek; and between her breafts muft be placed a knot of delicate fibres, from the ftalks of water Lilies, like the rays of an autumnal moon.

Mádh. Why does the queen cover part of her face, as if fhe was afraid of fomething, with the tips of her fingers, that glow like the flowers of the Cuvalaya? -Oh! I now perceive an impudent bee, that thief of odours, who feems eager to fip honey from the lotos of her mouth.

Duflom. A bee! drive off the importunate infect.

Mádb. The king has fupreme power over all offenders.
$D u / b m$. O male bee, who approacheft the lovely inhabitants of a flowery grove, why doft thou expofe thyfelf to the pain of being rejected ?-See where thy female fits on a bloffom, and, though thirfty, waits for thy return: without thee fhe will not tafte its nectar.

Mifr. [Afide.] A wild, but apt, addrefs !
Mádh. The perfidy of male bees is proverbial.
Dufbm. [Angrily.] Shouldft thou touch, O bee, the lip of my darling, ruddy as a frefh leaf on which no wind has yet breathed, a lip from which I drank fweetnefs in the banquet of love, thou fhalt, by my order, be imprifoned in the center of a lotos. Doft thou ftill difobey me?

Mádh. How can he fail to obey, fince you denounce fo fevere a punifhment? [Afide, laughing.] -He is ftark mad with love and affliction; whilft I, by keeping him company, fhall be as mad as he without either.
$D u / \mathrm{bm}$. After my pofitive injunction, art thou ftill unmoved?

Mádb. Why, my friend, it is only a painted bee.

Mifr. [Afide.] Oh! I perceive his miftake: it fhows the perfection of the art. But why does he continue mufing?

Du/bm. What ill-natured remark was that? -

Whilft I am enjoying the rapture of beholding her to whom my foul is attached, thou, cruel remembrancer, telleft me that it is only a picture. -[Weeping.]

Mifr. [Afide.] Such are the woes of a feparated lover! He is on all fides entangled in forrow.

Dufbm. Why do I thus indulge unremitted grief? That intercourfe with my darling which dreams would give, is prevented by my continued inability to repofe; and my tears will not fuffer me to view her diftinctly even in this picture.

Mijr. [Afide.] His mifery acquits him entirely of having deferted her in his perfect fenfes.

The Damfel re-enters.

Damf. As I was advancing, O king, with my box of pencils and colours-

Dufbm. [Haftily.] What happened?
Damf. It was forcibly feized by the queen Vafumati, whom her maid Pingalicà had apprifed of my errand; and the faid: "I will my" felf deliver the cafket to the fon of my lord."

Mádb. How came you to be releafed ?
Damf. While the queen's maid was difengaging the fkirt of her mantle, which had been caught by the branch of a thorny fhrub, I ftole away.

Dufim. Friend Mádhavya, my great attention to Vafumati has made her arrogant; and fhe will foon be here : be it your care to conceal the picture.

Mádh. [A/de.] I wifh you would conceal it yoarfelf.- [He takes the picture, and rifes.] -[Aloud.]-If, indeed, you will difentangle me from the net of your fecret apartments, to which I am confined, and fuffer me to dwell on the wall Méghach'handa which encircles them, I will hide the picture in a place where none fhall fee it but pigeons.
[He goes out.
Mifr. [Afide.] How honourably he keeps his former engagements, though his heart be now fixed on another object!
$A$ Warder enters with a leaf.
Ward. May the king profper!
$D u f b m$. Warder, haft thou lately feen the queen Vafumati?

Ward. I met her, O king; but when the perceived the leaf in my hand, fhe retired.
$D u / b m$. The queen diftinguifhes time: fhe would not impede my publick bufinefs.

Ward. The chief minifter fends this meffage: "I have carefully ftated a cafe which has arifen " in the city, and accurately committed it to " writing: let the king deign to confider it."

Dufbm. Give me the leaf. - [Receiving it, and reading.] - " Be it prefented at the foot 6: of the king, that a merchant named Dhana" vriddhi, who had extenfive commerce at fea, " was loft in a late fhipwreck: he had no child ${ }^{6}$ born ; and has left a fortune of many millions, " which belong, if the king commands, to the "royal treafury."-- [With forrow.] -Oh! how great a misfortune it is to die childlefs ! Yet with his affluence he muft have had many wives:-let an inquiry be made whether any one of them is pregnant.

Ward. I have heard that his wife, the daughter of an excellent man, named Sácétaca, has already performed the ceremonies ufual on pregnancy.

Dufbm. The child, though unborn, has a title to his father's property.-GGo: bid the minifter make my judgement publick.

[Going.
Dufbm. Stay a while.-
Ward. [Returning.] I am here.
Dufbm. Whether he had or had not left offfpring, the eftate fhould not have been forfeited, - Let it be proclaimed, that whatever kinfman any one of my fubjects may lofe, Dufhmanta (excepting always the cafe of forfeiture for crimes) will fupply, in tender affection, the place of that kinfman.

Ward. The proclamation fhall be made.-

> [He goes out.
[Dufhmanta continues meditating.]
Re-enter Warder.
O king! the royal decree, which proves that your virtues are awake after a long flumber, was heard with burfts of applaufe.

Dufbm. [Sighing deeply.] When an illuftrious man dies, alas, without an heir, his eftate goes to a ftranger ; and fuch will be the fate of all the wealth accumulated by the fons of Puru.

Ward. Heaven avert the calamity!
[Goes out.
$D u / \mathrm{bm}$. Wo is me! I am ftripped of all the felicity which I once enjoyed.

Mifr. [A/ide.] How his heart dwells on the idea of his beloved!

Dufbm. My lawful wife, whom I bafely deferted, remains fixed in my foul : fhe would have been the glory of my family, and might have produced a fon brilliant as the richeft fruit of the teeming earth.

Mifr. [Afide.] She is not forfaken by all; and foon, I truft, will be thine.

Damf. [Afide.] What a change has the minifter made in the king by fending him that mifchievous leaf! Behold, he is deluged with tears.
$D u / b m$. Ah me! the departed fouls of my anceftors, who claim a chare in the funeral cake, which I have no fon to offer, are apprehenfive of lofing their due honour, when Dufhmanta fhall be no more on earth :- who then, alas, will perform in our family thofe obfequies which the Véda prefcribes ?-My forefathers muft drink, inftead of a pure libation, this flood of tears, the only offering which a man who dies childlefs can make them.
[Weeping.
Mifr. [Afide.] Such a veil obfcures the king's cyes, that he thinks it total darknefs, though a lamp be now fhining brightly.
$\operatorname{Damf}$. Afflict not yourfelf immoderately: our lord is young; and when fons illuftrious as himfelf fhall be born of other queens, his anceftors will be redeemed from their offences committed here below.

Dufom. [With agony.] The race of Puru, which has hitherto been fruitful and unblemifhed, ends in me ; as the river Serefwatì difappears in a region unworthy of her divine ftream.
[He faints.
Damf. Let the king refume confidence.-

> [Sbe Jupports bim.

Mifr. [Afide.] Shall I reftore him? No; he will fpeedily be roufed - I heard the nymph Dévajananì confoling Sacontalá in thefe words: "As the gods delight in their portion of facri" fices, thus wilt thou foon be delighted by the "love of thy hufband." I go, therefore, to raife her fpirits, and pleafe my friend Ménacà with an account of his virtues and his affection [She rifes aloft and difappears.
Bebind the feenes. A Brahmen muft not be flain : fave the life of a Bráhmen.

Du/bm. [Reviving and lifening.] Hah! was not that the plaintive voice of Mádhavya?

Damf. He has probably been caught with the picture in his hand by Pingalicà and the other: maids.
$D_{u j} / b m$. Go, Chaturicà, and reprove the queen in my name for not reftraining her fervants, Damf. As the king commands.

[She goes out.
Again behind the fcenes. I am a Bráhmen, and muft not be put to death.
$D u / b m$. It is manifeftly fome Bráhmen in great danger.-Hola! who is there?

The old Chamberlain enters.
Cham. What is the king's pleafure?
Du/bm. Inquire why the faint-hearted Mádhavya cries out fo piteoufly.

Cham. I will know in an inftant.

> [He goes out, and returns trembling.

Duflom. Is there any alarm, Párvatáyana?
Cham. Alarm enough !
$D u f f m$. What caufes thy tremour ?-Thus do men tremble through age: fear fhakes the old man's body, as the breeze agitates the leaves of the Pippala.

Cham. Oh! deliver thy friend.
Dufbm. Deliver him! from what?
Cham. From diftrefs and danger.
Dufbm. Speak more plainly.
Cham. The wall which looks to all quarters of the heavens, and is named, from the clouds which cover it, Méghach'handa-Dufbm. What of that?

Cbam. From the fummit of that wall, the pinnacle of which is hardly attainable even by the blue-necked pigeons, an evil being, invifible to human eyes, has violently carried away the friend of your childhood.

Dufbm. [Starting up baftily.] What! are even my fecret apartments infefted by fupernatural agents?-Royalty is ever fubjected to mo-leftation.-A king knows not even the mifchiefs which his own negligence daily and hourly oc-cafions:-how then fhould he know what path his people are treading ; and how fhould he correct their manners when his own are uncorrected?

Bebind the fcenes. Oh, help! Oh, releafe me.
Duflom. [Liftening and advancing.] Fear not, my friend, fear nothing-- Behind the fcenes. Not fear, when a monfter has caught me by the nape of my neck, and means to fnap my backbone as he would fnap a fugar-cane!

Du/bm. [Darting bis eyes round.] Hola ! my bow-

A Warder enters with the king's bow and quiver. Ward. Here are our great hero's arms.
[Dufhmanta takes bis bow and an arrow.
Behind the fcenes. Here I ftand; and, thirfting for thy frefh blood, will flay thee ftruggling as a tyger flays a calf.-Where now is thy protector, Dufhmanta, who grafps his bow to defend the oppreffed?

Dufbom. [Wrathfully.] The demon names me with defiance.-Stay, thou bafeft of monfters.Here am I, and thou fhalt not long exift.[Raijing his bow.]-Show the way, Párvatáyana, to the ftairs of the terrace.

Cham. This way, great king!-

The Scene cbanges to a broad Terrace.

Enter Dufhmanta.
Duflom. [Looking round.] Ah! the place is deferted.

Behind the foenes. Save me, oh! fave me.-I fee thee, my friend, but thou canft not difcern me, who, like a moufe in the claws of a cat, have no hope of life.
$D u / b m$. But this arrow fhall diftinguifh thee from thy foe, in fpight of the magick which renders thee invifible.-Mádhavya, ftand firm; and thou, blood-thirfty fiend, think not of deftroying him whom I love and will protect.See, I thus fix a fhaft which fhall pierce thee, who deferveft death, and fhall fave a Bráhmen who deferves long life; as the celeftial bird fips the milk, and leaves the water which has been mingled with it. [He draws the bowftring.

Enter Mátali and Mádhavya.

Mät. The god Indra has deftined evil demons to fall by thy fhafts: againft them let thy bow be drawn, and caft on thy friends eyes bright with affection.

Duflom. [AftoniJbed, giving back his arms.] Oh! Mátali, welcome; I greet the driver of Indra's car.

Mádh. What! this cutthroat was putting me to death, and thou greeteft him with a kind welcome!

Mát. [Smiling.] O king, live long and conquer! Hear on what errand I am difpatched by the ruler of the firmament.

Dufbm. I am humbly attentive.

Mát. There is a race of Dánavas, the children of Cálanémi, whom it is found hard to fubdue-$D u / b m$. This I have heard already from Náred.

Mát. The god with an hundred facrifices, unable to quell that gigantick race, commiffions thee, his approved friend, to affail them in the front of battle; as the fun with feven fteeds defpairs of overcoming the dark legions of night, and gives way to the moon, who eafily fcatters them. Mount, therefore, with me, the car of Indra, and, grafping thy bow, advance to affured victory.
$D u f \mathrm{~mm}$. Such a mark of diftinction from the prince of good genii honours me highly; but fay why you treated fo roughly my poor friend Mádhavya.

Mát. Perceiving that, for fome reafon or another, you were grievoufly afflicted, I was defirous to roufe your firits by provoking you to wrath.-The fire blazes when wood is thrown on it; the ferpent, when provoked, darts his head againft the affailant; and a man capable of acquiring glory, exerts himfelf when his courage is excited.

Dufbom. [To Mádhavya.]-My friend, the command of Divefpetir muft inftantly he obeyed: go, therefore, and carry the intelligence to my chief minifter; faying to him in my name: " Let thy wifdom fecure my people from dan" ger while this braced bow has a different em"ployment."

Mádh. I obey; but wifh it could have been employed without affiftance from my terror.
[He goes out.
Mát. Afcend, great king.

ACT VII.

> Dufhmanta with Mátali in the car of Indra, fuppofed to be above the clouds, ## Dufbmanta.

IAM fenfible, O Mátali, that, for having executed the commiffion which Indra gave me, I deferved not fuch a profufion of honours.

Mát. Neither of you is fatisfied. You who have conferred fo great a benefit on the god of thunder, confider it as a trifling act of devotion; whilft he reckons not all his kindnefs equal to the benefit conferred.
$D u / b m$. There is no comparifon between the fervice and the reward.-He furpaffed my warmeft expectation, when, before he difmiffed me, he made me fit on half of his throne, thus exalting me before all the inhabitants of the Empyreum ; and fmiling to fee his fon Jayanta, who ftood near him, ambitious of the fame honour, perfumed my bofom with effence of heavenly fandal wood, throwing over my neck a garland of flowers blown in paradife.

Mát. O king, you deferve all imaginable rewards from the fovereign of good genii ; whofe empyreal feats have twice been difentangled from the thorns of Danu's race; formerly by the claws of the man-lion, and lately by thy unerring fhafts.

Dufbm. My victory proceeded wholly from the aufpices of the god; as on earth, when fervants profper in great enterprifes, they owe their fuccefs to the magnificence of their lords. ——Could Arun difpel the fhades of night if the deity with a thoufand beams had not placed him before the car of day?

Mát. That cafe, indeed, is parallel.-[Driving Mowly.]-See, O king, the full exaltation of thy glory, which now rides on the back of heaven! The delighted genii have been collecting, among the trees of life, thofe crimfon and azure dyes, with which the celeftial damfels tinge their beautiful feet; and they now are writing thy actions in verfes worthy of divine melody.

Dufbm. [Modefly.] In my tranfport, O Mátali, after the rout of the giants, this wonderful place had efcaped my notice. - In what path of the winds are we now journeying?

Mát. This is the way which leads along the triple river, heaven's brighteft ornament, and caufes yon luminaries to roll in a circle with diffufed beams: it is the courfe of a gentle breeze which fupports the floating forms of the gods; and this path was the fecond ftep of Vighnu, when he confounded the proud Vali.

Dufbm. My internal foul, which acts by exterior organs, is filled by the fight with a charming complacency.- [Looking at the wheels.]We are now paffing, I guefs, through the region of clouds.

Mát. Whence do you form that conjecture?
$D u / b m$. The car itfelf inftructs me that we are moving over clouds pregnant with fhowers; for the circumference of its wheels difperfes pellucid water; the horfes of Indra fparkle with lightning ; and I now fee the warbling Chátacas defcend from their nefts on the fummits of mountains.

Mát. It is even fo; and in another moment you will be in the country which you govern.

Duflom. [Looking down.] Through the rapid, yet imperceptible, defcent of the heavenly fteeds, I now perceive the allotted fation of men.- Aftonifhing profpect! It is yet fo diftant from us, that the low lands appear confounded with the high mountain tops; the trees erect their branchy fhoulders, but feem leaflefs; the rivers look like bright lines, but their waters vanifh; and, at this inftant, the globe of earth feems thrown upwards by fome ftupendous power.

Mát. [Looking with reverence on the eartb.] vol. Vif.

Duflom. Say, Mátali, what mountain is that which, like an evening cloud, pours exhilarating freams, and forms a golden zone between the weftern and eaftern feas?

Mát. That, O king, is the mountain of Gandharvas, named Hémacúta: the univerfe contains not a more excellent place for the fuccefsful devotion of the pious. There Cafyapa, father of the immortals, ruler of men, fon of Maríchi, who fprang from the felf-exiftent, refides with his confort Aditi, blefied in holy retirement.

Duflom. [Devoutly.] This occafion of attaining good fortune muft not be neglected: may I approach the divine pair, and do them complete homage?

Mát. By all means.-It is an excellent idea! -We are now defcended on earth.

Dufbm. [With wonder.] Thefe chariot wheels yield no found; no duft arifes from them; and the defcent of the car gave me no fhock.

Mát. Such is the difference, O king, between thy car and that of Indra!

Dufbm. Where is the holy retreat of Márí. chi ?

Mát. [Pointing.] A little beyond that grove, where you fee a pious Yógí, motionlefs as a pollard, holding his thick bufhy hair, and fixing his eyes on the folar orb.-Mark; his body is half covered with a white ant's edifice made of raifed clay; the fkin of a fnake fupplies the place of his facerdotal thread, and part of it girds his loins ; a number of knotty plants encircle and wound his neck; and furrounding birds' nefts almoft conceal his fhoulders.

Du/bm. I bow to a man of his auftere devotion.

Mat. [Cbecking the reins.] Thus far, and enough.-We now enter the fanctuary of him who rules the world, and the groves which are watered by ftreams from celeftial fources.

Dufbm. This afylum is more delightful than paradife itfelf: I could fancy myfelf bathing in a pool of nectar.

Mát. [Stopping the car.] Let the king defiend.

Dufbm. [Foyfully defcending.] How canft thou leave the car?

Mát. On fuch an occafion it will remain fixed: we may both leave it.-This way, victorious hero, this way.-Behold the retreat of the truly pious.
$D u f b m$. I fee with equal amazement both the pious and their awful retreat.-It becomes, indeed, pure fpirits to feed on balmy air in a foreft blooming with trees of life; to bathe in rills dyed yellow with the golden duft of the lotos, and to fortify their virtue in the myfterious bath; to meditate in caves, the pebbles of which are unblemifhed gems; and to reftrain their paffions, even though nymphs of exquifite beauty frolick around them: in this grove alone is attained the fummit of true piety, to which other hermits in vain afpire.

Mát. In exalted minds the defire of perfect excellence continually increafes.-[Turning afide.] -Tell me, Vriddhafácalya, in what bufinefs is the divine fon of Maríchi now engaged?-What fayeft thou?--Is he converfing with the daughter of Dacfha, who practifes all the virtues of a dutiful wife, and is confulting him on moral queftions?- Then we muft await his leifure.[To Dufhmanta.] Ref, O king, under the fhade of this Afóca tree, whilft I announce thy arrival to the father of Indra.

Dufbm. As you judge right.- [Mátali.goes out.-Dufhmanta feels bis right arm tbrob.] Why, O my arm, dof thou flatter me with a vain omen?-My former happinefs is loft, and mifery only remains.

Bebind the fcenes. Be not fo reftlefs: in every fituation thou fhoweft thy bad temper.

Dulbom. [Liftening.] Hah! this is no place, furely, for a malignant difpofition.-Who can be thus rebuked?-[Looking with Jurprife.]-1 fee a child, but with no childifh countenance or frength, whom two female anchorites are endeavouring to keep in order; while he forcibly pulls towards him, in rough play, a lion's whelp with a torn mane, who feems juft dragged from the half-fucked nipple of the lionefs!

A little Boy and troo female Attendants are difcovered, as defcribed by the king.
Boy. Open thy mouth, lion's whelp, that I may count thy teeth.

Firft Atten. Intractable child! Why doft thou torment the wild animals of this foreft, whom we cherifh as if they were our own offspring? - Thou feemeft even to fport in anger.-Aptly have the hermits named thee Servademana, fince thou tameft all creatures.

Dußbm. Ah! what means it that my heart inclines to this boy as if he were my own fon? - [Meditating.]-Alas! I have no fon; and the reflection makes me once more foft-hearted.

Second Atten. The lionefs will tear thee to pieces if thou releafe not her whelp.

Boy. [Smiling.] Oh! I am greatly afraid of her to be fure !
[He bites bis lip, as in defiance of her.
Dufom. [Afode, amazed.] The child exhibits the rudiments of heroick valour, and looks like fire which blazes from the addition of dry fuel.

Firft Atten. My beloved child, fet at liberty this young prince of wild beafts; and I will give thee a prettier plaything.

Boy. Give it firft.-Where is it ? [Stretching out bis band.
Dubm. [Afide, gazing on the cbild's palm.] What! the very palm of his hand bears the marks of empire ; and whilft he thus eagerly extends it, fhows its lines of exquifite network, and glows like a lotos expanded at early dawn, when the ruddy fplendour of its petals hides all other tints in obfcurity.

Second Atten. Mere words, my Suvrità, will not pacify him.-Go, I pray, to my cottage, where thou wilt find a plaything made for the hermit's child, Sancara: it is a peacock of earthenware painted with rich colours.

Firft Atten. I will bring it fpeedily.
[Sbe goes out.
Boy. In the mean time I will play with the young lion.

Second Atten. [Looking at bim witb a fmile.] Let him go, I entreat thee.
$D u / b m$. [A/vd.] I feel the tendereft affection for this unmanageable child. [Sigbing.] -How fweet muft be the delight of virtuous fathers, when they foil their bofoms with duft by lifting up their playful children, who charm them with inarticulate prattle, and fhow the white bloffoms of their teeth, while they laugh innocently at every trifling occurrence!

Second Atten. [Raifing her finger.] What! doft thou fhow no attention to me? [ Looking round.] - Are any of the hermits near?-[Seeing Dufhmanta.] -Oh! let me requeft you, genthe ftranger, to releafe the lion's whelp, who cannot difengage himfelf from the grafp of this robuft child.

Dufbm. I will endeavour.- [Approacbing the Boy and fimiling.]-O thou, who art the fon of a pious anchorite, how canft thou difhonour thy father, whom thy virtues would make happy, by violating the rules of this confecrated foreft? It becomes a black ferpent only, to infeft the boughs of a fragrant fandal tree.
[The Boy releafes the lion.
Second Atten. I thank you, courteous guet; -but he is not the fon of an anchorite.
$D u / b m$. His actions, indeed, which are conformable to his robuftnefs, indicate a different birth: but my opinion arofe from the fanctity of the place which he inhabits.- [Taking the Boy by the band.]-[Afide.]-Oh! fince it gives me fuch delight merely to touch the hand of this child, who is the hopeful fcion of a family unconnected with mine, what rapture muft be felt by the fortunate man from whom he fprang?

Second Atten. [Gazing on them alternately.] Oh wonderful!

Dufbom. What has raifed your wonder?
Second Atten. The aftonifhing refemblance between the child and you, gentle ftranger, to whom he bears no relation.--It furprifed me alfo to fee, that although he has childifh humours, and had no former acquaintance with you, yet your words have reftored him to his natural good temper.

Dufbm. [Raijng the Boy to bis bofom.] Holy matron, if he be not the fon of a hermit, what then is the name of his family?

Second Atten. He is defcended from Puru.
Dufiom. [Afide.] Hah! thence, no doubt, fprings his difpofition, and my affection for him. -[Setting him down.] - [Aloud.] It is, I know, an eftablifhed ufage among the princes of Puru's race, to dwell at firft in rich palaces with ftuccoed walls, where they protect and cherifh the world, but in the decline of life to feek humbler manfions near the roots of venerable trees, where hermits with fubdued paffions practife auftere devotion.-I wonder, however, that this boy, who moves like a god, could have been bern of a mere mortal.

Second Atten. Affable ftranger, your wonder will ceafe when you know that his mother is related to a celeftial nymph, and brought him forth in the facred foreft of Cafyapa.

Dufbom. [Afide.] I am tranfported.-This is a frefh ground of hope.- [Aloud.]-What virtuous monarch took his excellent mother by the hand?

Second Atten. Oh! I muft not give celebrity to the name of a king who deferted his lawful wife.

Duflom. [A/ide.] Ah! the means me.-Let me now afk the name of the fweet child's mo-ther.- [Meditating.] - But it is againft good manners to inquire concerning the wife of another man.

The Firft Attendant re-enters with a toy.
Firft Atten. Look, Servademana, look at the beauty of this bird, Saconta lávanyam.

Boy. [Looking eagerly round.] Sacontalá! Oh, where is my beloved mother?
[Both Attendants laugh.
Firft Atten. He tenderly loves his mother, and was deceived by an equivocal phrafe.

Second Atten. My child, fhe meant only the beautiful fhape and colours of this peacock.

Duflom. [A/ide.] Is my Sacontala then his mother? Or has that dear name been given to fome other woman? - This converfation refembles the fallacious appearance of water in a defert, which ends in bitter difappointment to the ftag parched with thirft.

Boy. I fhall like the peacock if it can run and fly; not elfe.
[He takes it.

Firft Atten. [Looking round in confufion.] Alas, the child's amulet is not on his wrift!

Dufbm. Be not alarmed. It was dropped while he was playing with the lion: I fee it, and will put it into your hand.

Both. Oh! beware of touching it.
Firg Atten. Ah! he has actually taken it up. [Tbey both gaze with furprife on each other.
Dufbm. Here it is ; but why would you have reftrained me from touching this bright gem?

Second Atten. Great monarch, this divine amulet has a wonderful power, and was given to the child by the fon of Marichi, as foon as the facred rites had been performed after his birth : whenever it fell on the ground, no human being but the father or mother of this boy could have touched it unhurt.

Dufbm. What if a ftranger had taken it ?
Firft Atten. It would have become a ferpent and wounded him.

Dufbm. Have you feen that confequence on any fimilar occafion?

Both. Frequently.
Dußbm. [With tran/port.] I may then exult on the completion of my ardent defire.
[He embraces the child.
Second Atten. Come, Suvritá, let us carry the delightful intelligence to Sacontalá, whom the harfh duties of a feparated wife have fo long oppreffed.
[The Attendants go out.
Boy. Farewell; I mult go to my mother.
Duflom. My darling fon, thou wilt make her happy by going to her with me.

Boy. Dufhmanta is my father; and you are not Dufhmanta.

Dufom. Even thy denial of me gives me delight.

Sacontalá enters in mourning apparel, with ber long bair twifted in a fingle braid, and flowing down ber back.

Sac. [Afide.] Having heard that my child's amulet has proved its divine power, I mult either be ftrangely diffident of my good fortune, or that event which Mifracésì prediated has actually happened. [Advancing.

Dufbm. [Witb a mixture of joy and forrow.] Ah! do I fee the incomparable Sacontala clad in fordid weeds? - Her face is emaciated by the performance of auftere duties; one twifted lock floats over her fhoulder; and with a mind perfectly pure, the fupports the long abfence of her hufband, whofe unkindnefs exceeded all bounds.

Sac. [Seeing him, yet doubting.] Is that the fon of my lord grown pale with penitence and afflicion? -If not, who is it, that fullies with his touch the hand of my child, whofe amulet fhould have preferved him from fuch indignity?

Boy. [Going baftily to Sacontalá.] Mother, here is a ftranger who calls me fon.

Dufbm. Oh! my beft beloved, I have treated thee cruelly; but my cruelty is fucceeded by the warmeft affection ; and I implore your remembrance and forgivenefs.

Sac. [Afide.] Be confident, O my heart !-[Aloud.]-I fhall be moft happy when the king's anger has paffed away. - [Afide.] - This muft be the fon of my lord.
$D u / b m$. By the kindnefs of heaven, O lovelieft of thy fex, thou ftandeft again before me, whofe memory was obfcured by the gloom of fafcination ; as the ftar Róhini at the end of an eclipfe rejoins her beloved moon.

Sac. May the king be-
[She burfts into tears.
Dufbm. My darling, though the word victorious be fuppreffed by thy weeping, yet I muft have victory, fince I fee thee again, though with pale lips and a body unadorned.

Boy. What man is this, mother?
Sac. Sweet child, afk the divinity, who prefides over the fortunes of us both. [She weeps.

Dufhm. O my only beloved, banifh from thy mind my cruel defertion of thee.-A violent phrenfy overpowered my foul.-Such, when the darknefs of illufion prevails, are the actions of the beft intentioned; as a blind man, when a friend binds his head with a wreath of flowers, miftakes it for a twining fnake, and foolifhly rejects it.
[He falls at her feet.
Sac. Rife, my hufband, oh! rife-My happinefs has been long interrupted; but joy now fucceeds to affliction, fince the fon of my lord ftill loves me.- [He rifes.]-How was the remembrance of this unfortunate woman reftored to the mind of my lord's fon?
$D u / b m$. When the dart of mifery fhall be wholly extracted from my bofom, I will tell you all; but fince the anguifh of my foul has in part ceafed, let me firf wipe of that tear which trickles from thy delicate eye-lafh; and thus efface the memory of all the tears which my delirium has made thee fhed.
Sac. [Wiping off her tears, and feeing the ring on his finger.] Ah! is that the fatal ring?

Dufbm. Yes; by the furprifing recovery of it my memory was reftored.

Sac. Its influence, indeed, has been great; fince it has brought back the loft confidence of my hurband.
$D u / \mathrm{bm}$. Take it then, as a beautiful plant receives a flower from the returning feafon of joy.

Sac. I cannot again truft it.-Let it be worn by the fon of my lord.

Mátali enters.
Mát. By the will of heaven the king has happily met his beloved wife, and feen the countenance of his little fon.

Duffom. It was by the company of my friend that my defire attained maturity.-But fay, was not this fortunate event previoufly known to Indra?

Mát. [Smiling.] What is unknown to the gods?-But come: the divine Marícha defires to fee thee.

Duflom. Beloved, take our fon by the hand; and let me prefent you both to the father of immortals.

Sac. I really am afhamed, even in thy prefence, to approach the deities.
$D_{u} / \mathrm{bm}$. It is highly proper on fo happy an occafion.-Come, I entreat thee.
[They all advance.
The fcene is witbdrawn, and Cafyapa is difcovered on a throne converfing with Aditi.
Caf. [Pointing to the king.] That, O daughter of Dacfha, is the hero who led the fquadrons of thy fon to the front of battle, a fovereign of the earth, Dufhmanta; by the means of whofe bow the thunder-bolt of Indra (all its work being accomplifhed) is now a mere ornament of his heavenly palace.

Adi. He bears in his form all the marks of exalted majefty.

Mát. [To Dufhmanta.] The parents of the twelve Adityas, O king, are gazing on thee, as on their own offspring, with eyes of affection. Approach them, illuftrious prince.
$D u f b m$. Are thofe, O Mátali, the divine pair, fprung from Maríchi and Dacfha?-Are thofe the grand-children of Brahmá, to whom the felf-exiftent gave birth in the beginning; whom infpired mortals pronounce the fountain of glory apparent in the form of twelve funs; they who produced my benefactor, the lord of a hundred facrifices, and ruler of three worlds?

Mat. Even they-[Proftrating himfelf with Dufhmanta.] - Great beings, the king Dufhmanta, who has executed the commands of your fon Vafava, falls humbly before your throne.

Caf. Continue long to rule the world.
Adi. Long be a warriour with a car unfhattered in combat.
[Sacontala and her fon proftrate themfelves.
Caf. Daughter, may thy hufband be like Indra! May thy fon refemble Jayanta! And mayft thou (whom no benediction could better fuit) be equal in profperity to the daughter of $\mathrm{Pu}=$ lóman!

Adi. Preferve, my child, a conftant unity with thy lord: and may this boy, for a great length of years, be the ornament and joy of you both ! Now be feated near us. [Tbey all fit down.
Caf. [Looking at them by turns.] Sacontala is the model of excellent wives; her fon is dutiful; and thou, O king, haft three rare advantages, true piety, abundant wealth, and active virtue.

Duflom. O divine being, having obtained the former object of my moft ardent wifhes, I now have reached the fummit of earthly happinefs through thy favour, and thy benizon will enfure its permanence.-Firft appears the flower, then the fruit; firft clouds are collected, then the fhower falls: fuch is the regular courfe of caufes and effects; and thus, when thy indulgence preceded, felicity generally followed.

Mát. Great indeed, O king, has been the kindnefs of the primeval Bráhmens.

Dufbm. Bright fon of Marichi, this thy handmaid was married to me by the ceremony of Gandharvas, and, after a time, was conducted to my palace by fome of her family; but my memory having failed through delirium, I rejected her, and thus committed a grievous offence againft the venerable Canna, who is of thy divine lineage: afterwards, on feeing this fatal ring, I remembered my love and my nuptials; but the whole tranfaction yet fills me with wonder. My foul was confounded with ftrange ignorance that obfcured my fenfes; as if a man were to fee an elephant marching before him, yet to doubt what animal it could be, till he difcovered by the traces of his large feet that it was an elephant.

Caf. Ceafe, my fon, to charge thyfelf with an offence committed ignorantly, and, therefore, innocently, - Now hear me-$D u / b m$. I am devoutly attentive.
Caf. When the nymph Ménacà led Sacontalá from the place where thy defertion of her had afflicted her foul, fhe brought her to the palace of Aditi ; and I knew, by the power of meditation on the Supreme Being, that thy forgetfulnefs of thy pious and lawful confort had proceeded from the imprecation of Durváfas, and that the charm would terminate on the fight of thy ring.

Dufbm. [Afide.] My name then is cleared from infamy.

Sac. Happy am I that the fon of my lord, who now recognifes me, denied me through ignorance, and not with real averfion.-The terrible imprecation was heard, I fuppofe, when my mind was intent on a different object, by my two beloved friends, who, with extreme affection, concealed it from me to fare my feelings, but advifed me at parting to fhow the ring if my hufband fhould have forgotten me.

Caf. [Turning to Sacontalá.] Thou art apprifed, my daughter, of the whole truth, and muft no longer refent the behaviour of thy lord. ——He rejected thee when his memory was impaired by the force of a charm; and when the gloom was difpelled, his conjugal affection revived; as a mirror whofe furface has been fullied, reflects no image ; but exhibits perfect refemblances when its polifh has been reftored.

Dufbm. Such, indeed, was my fituation.
Caf. My fon Dufhmanta, haft thou embraced thy child by Sacontala, on whofe birth I myfelf performed the ceremonies prefcribed in the Véda?

Dufom. Holy Maríchi, he is the glory of my houfe.
$C a f$. Know too, that his heroick virtue will raife him to a dominion extended from fea to fea: before he has paffed the ocean of mortal life, he fhall rule, unequalled in combat, this earth with feven peninfulas; and, as he now is called Servademana, becaufe he tames even in childhood the fierceft animals, fo, in his riper years, he fhall acquire the name of Bhereta, becaufe he fhall fuftain and nourifh the world.
$D u J b m$. A boy educated by the fon of Maríchi, muft attain the fummit of greatnefs.

Adi. Now let Sacontalá, who is reftored to happinefs, convey intelligence to Canna of all thefe events: her mother Ménacà is in my family, and knows all that has paffed.

Sac. The goddefs propofes what I moft ardently wifh.

Caf. By the force of true piety the whole fcenc will be prefent to the mind of Canna.
$D u / / b m$. The devout fage muft be ftill exceffively indignant at my frantick behaviour.

Caf. [Meditating.] Then let him hear from me the delightful news, that his fofter-child has been tenderly received by her hufband, and that both are happy with the little warriour who fprang from them.-Hola! who is in waiting?

> A Pupil enters.

Pup. Great being, I am here.
Caf. Haften, Gólava, through the light air, and in my name inform the venerable Canna, that Sacontalá has a charming fon by Dufhmanta, whofe affection for her was reftored with his remembrance, on the termination of the fpell raifed by the angry Durváfas.

Pup. As the divinity commands.
[He goes out.
Caf. My fon, reafcend the car of Indra with thy confort and child, and return happy to thy imperial feat.
$D u / b m$. Be it as Maríchi ordains.
Caf. Henceforth may the god of the atmofphere with copious rain give abundance to thy affectionate fubjects; and mayft thou with frequent facrifices maintain the Thunderer's friendfhip! By numberlefs interchanges of good offices between you both, may benefits reciprocally be conferred on the inhabitants of the two worlds!

Dufbm. Powerful being, I will be ftudious, as far as I am able, to attain that felicity.

Caf. What other favours can I beftow on thee?
$D u / b m$. Can any favours exceed thofe already beftowed?-Let every king apply himfelf to the attainment of happinefs for his people; let Serefwati, the goddefs of liberal arts, be adored by all readers of the Véda ; and may Siva, with an azure neck and red locks, eternally potent and felf-exitting, avert from me the pain of another birth in this perifhable world, the feat of crimes and of punifhment.
